The meeting cailed on the Government to reserve special representation for blacks in British society in the same way as it had insisted on reserved seats for whites in the new Zimbabwe Assembly.

Specifically they called for reserved places in the running of the health service, transport systems and on the Police Complaints Board.

Mr Pinder said they wanted a police force that was accountable and one that would protect the black people. The new body would campaign for this. It would not supplement, complement, or replace any organi-zation, including the CRE. Mr David Lane, the commis

Why blacks cannot rise against apartheid

This is the first of a four-part series by our Southern Africa Correspondent, reporting on the way the races are facing up to South Africa's mounting crisis.

From Nicholas Ashford
Johannesburg, June 29
Why, the question is frequently asked these days, have not blacks in South Africa risen up en masse in support of the Coloured and Indian students who were boycotting

The question is seen to be pertinent following this month's violence in Cape Town which coincided with the fourth amniversary of the massive outburst of black protest in Soweto in 1976. But the basis for the question is in fact unsound as there have been numerous black demonstrations across the coun try, notably in black universi-ties and also in black townships in Cape Town, Durban and unusually-Bloemfontein.

However, the fact that there has not been a nationwide explosion of black anger this time is not so much because of the animosities that exist be-tween blacks and Coloureds (a favourite theory among the country's white authorities for whom ethnicity is everything) but because the blacks ere but because the blacks eveleaderless, divided and undecided about the strategy to adopt against the Nationalist Government's "new style"

The scars of the 1976 unrest have not yet healed. The leaders who were then beginning to emerge are either dead, in prison or have fled into exic. Attempts to set up new political organizations have quickly been squashed by the authorities who have not heritated to the proposition of descriptions. laws their arsenal of draconical laws to han, detain or imprison potential leaders.

Bishop Tutu, the outsnoten neneral secretary of the Seath African Council of Churches, has emerged as one of the most has emerged as one of the ment prominent spelesmen for the country's disenfrenchised black majority, but he would not re-gard himself as their leader. Dr Nazho Motlana and other members of the Soweto com-mittee of ten are skilful ex-ponents of black grievances, but they is little widence that but there is little evidence that they have a wide following.

The only black leader with a clear constituency is Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, the Zulu leader and head of the Inkatha orzanization which has more than 300,000 (predominantly Zulu) members. But although Chief Buthelezi aspires to be accepted as the leader of all country's 20 million blacks, he is mistrusted both by the other tribal groupings who fear Zulu domination and, more importantly, by a substan-tial proportion of urban blacks.

Many inhabitants of Soweto other townships believe from a government-created plan orm, in his capacity as Chief Minister of the Kwa-Zulu "homeland", Chief Buthelezi is actually promoting apartheid, rather than resisting it. For them Chief Buthelezi is little more than a South Afri-

Mr Ian MacGregor, the British Steel Corporation's controversial new chairman, will this week initiate a review of the bankrupt corporation's retreach-

Mr MacGregor, who succeeds is under intense pressure to provide the Government with an up to date and realistic assessment of BSC's prospects as soon as possible in the wake of last week's disclosures that the state steel undertaking is set to overspend its £450m ex-ternal financing limit by £400m:

Sir Keith Joseph, Secretary of State for Industry, has called on Mr MacGregor to use every practicable means to bring the corporation's cash requirement as close as possible to the £450m it has been allocated for the present financial year. Although no time limit for the review has been set. Mr MacGregor will clearly be keen to conclude it as soon as possible.

The cash crisis, a rising from the drop in demand from the main steel-using industries and main steel-using measures and compounded by inflation and the strength of sterling, has raised the spectre of further closures and redundancies beyond the 52,000 job losses announced by BSC last year.

Demand for steel in the United Kingdom this year is likely to be only marginally more than 12 million tonnes, with a fur-ther 7 to 8 per cent fell forecast for next year. Imports, to which many customers turned during the steel strike in the first three months of this year, are still running at high levels, and the BSC is finding it difficult to claw back the share of the home market it has lost.

Reports that the new chairman was poised to cancel the BSC's plan for the giant steelworks at Llanwern and Port Talbot in South Wales by closing one of the two completely were described by the BSC last pight as pure speculation. It was emphasized that Mr MacGregor had taken no decision on further cutbacks, closures and redundancies, although his visits will have provided him with much of the information on which to base

Plans in motion for the disposal o fsome of BSC's substantial assets are expected to yield about £150m in the present financial year, and the scope for increasing disposals will clearly be among priorities for consideration.

The Government has made it clear that its willingness to commit further funds to the BSC will be influenced by the vigour and speed with which corrective action is implemented and on the outcome of the review. An assessme prospects, especially among tradionally large steel consumers like the motor industry and en-gineering will be critical to the proposals that Mr MacGregor will put to the Government later

Women who work in their sere least likely to qualify for maternity rights; least likely to use the reinstatement right by notifying their employers that they intend to return to work after giving birth; and least likely to fail to return when they have given notice. Those findings have topical significance, as Mr W. W. Daniel of the Policy Studies Institute, author of the report; points out. The Government is attempting to limit existing maternity rights in response to representations by employers,

"As far as employers are concerned it is difficult to see from our findings how the right could, in practice, have created much general difficulty for them, especially for small employers."

The study, based on a national survey of nearly 2,500 women who had babies early last year, found that 24 per cent were back at work eight months after the birth and a further 14 per cent, were seeking work. The 1971 census showed that only 9 per cent of all recent mothers were at work a year after the birth.

While that change represents a big difference in the labour market, it has not been caused by the right to reinstatement, introduced two years before the study.

The Jaguar XJ series has more than once earned the epithet he finest car in the world."

So it is not surprising that the XJ64.2 has become the tandard against which makers of imported cars in the same price range seek to compare themselves.

Needless to say it takes more than a few carefully selected tatistics to prove how brilliantly a car will perform.

And we would be the first to admit that the 4.2's 127 m.p.h. naximum speed* is, in normal circumstances, academic.

More important by far is the way it travels at high speed. The sure-footed ease and almost uncanny silence that place the XJ64.2 in a class of its own.

Design features that spring directly from Jaguar's motor racing inheritance.

Like the fully-independent anti-dive suspension system—completely isolated from the body shell by sophisticated front and rear sub-frames.

Fail-safe servo-assisted disc brakes on all four wheelsventilated in front, inboard at the rear.

A race-bred 205BHP 4.2 litre twin-cam engine. And a new digital electronic fuel-injection system that manages the impossible - a dramatic improvement both in performance and fuel economy.

The XJ6 is the quietest car ever tested for interior noise level by MOTOR magazine. Its high-speed stopping power also proved superior to every other car tested.

Inside, the 4.2 surrounds driver and passengers with the sumptuous comfort of leather seating with adjustable lumbar support on the front seats, deep-pile carpeting and the rare delight of individually matched walnut veneering.

While statistics shout, the XJ6 4.2 continues in its quiet way to provide a totally unparalleled motoring experience.

For confirmation we recommend a simple course of action: a test drive.

The elation of the language campaigners was dashed by Mr Whitelaw in a speech at Cambridge in October which has be-

The painting had been long forgotten in an unnamed Scottish collection until it was recognized two years ago by Hugh Brigstocke of the National Gallery. It had once belonged to Hugh Munro of Novar, the great Scottish collector and a keen patron of Turner.

Article 11 expressly made the adoption of a Commission decision subject to the condition that the latter has previously asked for the necessary information by means of a request addressed to those concerned and specified the essentials which such a request had to contain. Article 14 allowed an investigation by means of a decision where the neg preliminary of this subject to no preliminary of this

In general they aimed at checking the actual existence and scope of information which the Commission already had, and did not therefore necessarily presuppose previous cooperation by udertakings in possession of the necessary information.

The applicants arguments did

The applicants arguments did not take into account the distinction made by the regulation itself between the "information" referred to in Article 11 and the "investigation" referred to in Article 14. The fact that the officials authorized by the Commission, in carrying out an investigation, had the power to request during that investigation information on specific question arising from the books and business records which they examined was The applicants arguments did from the books and business records which they examined was not sufficient to conclude that an investigation was identical to a procedure intended only to obtain information within the meaning of Article 11 of the regulation.

The first submission was dismission was dismissed as unfounded.

Article 11 of the regulation.

The first submission was dismissed as unfounded.

Second, the applicant claimed that by falling to communicate to it beforehand the decision ordering the investigation in question, the commission had infringed its fundamental rights, in particular the right to receive advance notification, the right to be heard before a decision adversely affecting it was taken, and the right to use the opportunity given to it under Article 185 of the Treaty to request a stay of execution of such a decision. The applicant relied in particular in Article 3 of the European Convention in human rights whereby "everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence". It considered that those guarantees must be provided mutatis mutandis also to legal persons.

Article 8 (2) of the European Convention, in so far as it applied to legal persons, whilst stating the principle that public authorities should not interfere with the exercise of the rights referred to in Article 8 (1). acknowledged that such interference was possible to the extent to which it is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interferes of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the coun-or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the pro-tection of the rights and freedom of others.". In this instance, as followed from the preamble to Regulation 17 the aim of the powers given to the Commission by Article 14 was to enable it to carry out its duty under the EEC treaty of ensuring that the rules on competition were applied in the European Common Market.

Dealing with the argument that the applicant had been denied the right to be heard before a decision was taken, it was necessary to state that the exercise of such a right of defence was chiefly incorporated in legal or administrative procedures for the termination of an infringement or for a declaration that an agreement, decision or concerted practice was incompatible with Article 85, such as the procedures tice was incompatible with Article 85, such as the procedures referred to by regulation No 99/63/EEC.

On the argument that the absence of previous information deprived the applicant of the opportunity of exercising its right under Article 185 of the treaty to request the court for a stay of execution, that provision presupposed that a decision has been adopted and that it was effective, whereas the previous notification, which the applicant complained adopted and that it was effective, whereas the previous notification, which the applicant complained that the Commission did not send, should have preceded the adoption of the contested decision and could not have been binding.

In view of those considerations the second submission did not appear to be well founded either. Third, the applicant maintained that the decision was irregular in that it failed to state or to state properly the reasons on which it was based, in particular because it did not indicate the reasons why the Commission applied Article 14 (3) of Regulation No 17 without first attempting of carry out an informal investigation.

It was an established fact that the preamble to the decision stated the purpose, which was to check facts which might show the existence of an export ban contrary to the treaty, and indicated the penalties laid down, it was also established that Articles 1 and 2 of that decision stated when the contrary to the treaty, and indicated the penalties laid down, it was also established that Articles 1 and 2 of that decision stated the subject matter of the investigation decided upon and the place where and was to be carried out. Finally, the second paragraph of Article 3 of the decision indicated the possidate on which that investigation was to be carried out. Finally, the second paragraph of Article 3 of the decision indicated the possibility of instituting proceedings before the Court against such a decision. In accordance with Article 173 of the Treaty. It followed that the decision fulfilled the requirements laid down in Regulation No. 17 as regards the statement of the reasons upon which it was based. The submission was therefore unfounded.

Fourth, the applicant contended that the principle of proportionality, as established by the case law of the Court of Justice, implied that a decision ordering an investigation adopted without the preliminary procedure could only be justified if the situation was very grave and where there was the greatest urgency and the need for complete secrecy before the investigation was carried out. Considering that the decision aimed solely at enabling the Commission to collect the necessary infringement of the Treaty, it did not appear that the Commission's action was disproportionate to the objective pursued and therefore violated the principle of proportionality. The court dismissed the appli-the principle of proportionality.

The court dismissed the application as unfounded and ordered the applicant to pay the costs.

French call to bar private patients

Paris, June 29

Private patients should no longer be allowed to use public hospitals, the French Audit Office says in its annual report. Its investigations have disclosed widescale abuse of the present system and it calls at least for adical reform in default of a watchdog on public spending and its findings are examined seriously by the Government. Its findings on the abuses in the private sector of the health service seem certain to add to the present agitation inside the medical profession over new measures to force doctors to restrict the size of their fees to state-approved levels. According to the report, the

pitals is not only no longer justified in terms of providing an alternative better care for patients able to afford it, but it is eating into funds available for the public sector.

The Audit Office's investigations have found that the fees which should be added.

which should be paid to a hospital by private doctors for decision to end it.

The Audit Office is the state's materials are frequently not watchdog on public spending paid and even if they are the amounts bear little relationship

One doctor at Lagny was found to have been using a hospital for five years to give consultations and had never paid anything for the facilities. At Lille, Chambery and Strasbourg it was found that private use of the facilities was well above the permitted norms. In Marseilles, stricter controls had succeeded in recovering 40,000 francs (£4,040, in one year but, generally, the Audit Office finds that "the sums to be repaid are not related to the size of the fees".

The report blames the lack of control by the authorities over reforms introduced in the past 20 years for the mushrooming of so many different sys-tems that it has been difficult if not impossible for a close check to be kept. It argues that the new cuts in hospital expen-diture must be backed by a general reform in their administration.

A similar lack of control is blamed by the report for the rapid growth in the cost of pro-viding social security aid in Paris last year. This was due, the report says to bad relations with the public assistance authorities which led to unjustified advances.

US accepts European allies have own views

The two-day gathering of Nato foreign ministers here last week was the culmination of a series of international meetings in recent months which, in one way of another have been concerned with reconciling the defence and foreign policy interests of the United States and its European allies. and its European allies.

The revolution in Iran and the seizing of American hostages, the Soviet interven-tion in Afghanistan, the worsening situation in the Middle Fast and the threat posed by nuclear missiles in Europe have all subjected the Westrn alliance to acute strain.

It may be true that the differences between the allies have related more to prescrip-tion than diagnosis, and that in some cases disagreements have been exaggerated by the need to strike attitudes for domestic audiences in the approach to national elections. But they have not been any less real for

The most hopeful development, perhaps, is a new American readiness to accept that a distinctive West European perspective on world affairs should not automatically be treated as heresy. What follows is an attempt to accept the extent to attempt to assess the extent to which a common view has emerged on the main issues facing the alliance.

Afghanistan: All agree that there must be a total and permanent withdrawal of Soviet troops and that any solution which permitted the Babrak Karmal regime to remain in power without submission to some reasonably genuine test of popular support would be

Middle East: The allies have simply agreed to differ. The Americans take the view, in the ohrase of Mr Edmund Muskie, the Secretary of State, that only "hard and grinding negotiations" between Israel and Egypt, on the basis of the Camp David agreements, can prepare the ground for a Middle East settlement.

The Europeans believe that the Palestinians must be associated more directly with the peace process, but they have refrained from taking their case to the United Nations, and settled instead for more discreet diplomatic soundings in the hope that American atti-tudes will be more flexible after the presidential elections.

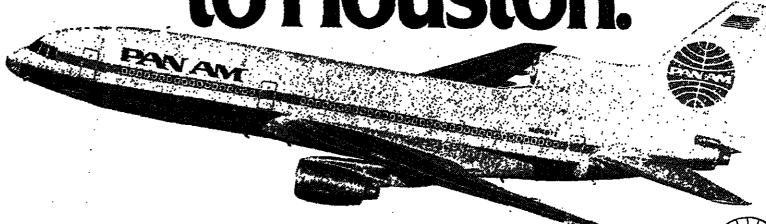

Iran: Since the abortive attempt to rescue the American hostages, this issue has been "on the back burner". The Americans have contained their disappointment over the limited scope of economic sanctions from the EEC, and appear for the moment to accept that only patient diplomacy is likely to free their compatriots in Missiles in Europe: Despite some "clearing of the air" in Venice, Herr Helmut Schmidt the West German Chancellor, is still upset over the lettre he received from President Carter rebuking him for allegedly backsliding on a Nato decision to deploy 572 new American nuclear missiles in West Europe to counter the Soviet SS20s.

Herr Schmidt claims that his proposal for a "freeze" on such weapons was misrepre-sented by the press.

The Americans remain sus-picious, and will be watching Herr Schmidt's Moscow visit very closely. So will the Belgians. Israeli Foreign Minister accuses Egyptian officials and press of anti-semitic remarks

On the eye of the tripertite talks in Washington simed at reviving the deadlocked nego-tistions on Palestinian autonomy, Mr Yitzhak Shamir, the Israeli Foreign Minister, has publicly accused members of the Egyptian Government and Catro's semi-official press of making anti-semitic remarks.

Most recently, Egypt has been annoyed by Israel's new security plan which envisages the retention of a large and closely linked miliary and settlement presence in the autonomous area; a force which would be completely outside the control of the projected autonomy council. Details of the plan were

Mr Harold Denton, director of nuclear reactor regulation for the Nuclear Regulatory Commis-sion (NRC) was philosophical about this new delay.

"I told my family coming up here yesterday that, based on experience, there was only a 50-50 chance that this starcrossed plan would work", he said. "I was right".

Sanjay Gandhi's ashes scattered in rivers

Delhi, June 29 In accordance with religious ritual, the ashes of Sanjay Gandhi were distributed to more than 20 places in India this weekend and strewn in rivers, the sea and in sacred lakes. Urns holding the ashes went b yroad, rail and air to the final ceremonies, where they were watched by hundreds thousands of people, many of thousands of people, many of them supporters of the Indira Congress Party, and of the Youth Congress. In some the routh Congress. In some places the rices were organized by the party itself. Everywhere the ashes were dispersed to cries of "Long live Sanjay Gandhi!"

Tributes to Mr Gandhi continue to flow. Newspapers have been printing display advertisements expressing grief, and the Sunday papers today carried full page advertise-ments placed by an industrial concern under the heading "Darkness at Noon".

Meanwhile there are moves to perpetuate the memory of Mr Gandhi. A national park and a sports centre are to be named after him, and there is talk of putting his name to roads, a medical school, a power station, a foundation and a scholarship.

The anguish of many Indians is plain to see. And given that the Gandhi mystique is a pow-erful element in Indian politics, erful element in Indian politics, it is not surprising that people are casting around for someone to fill the gap. Mr Gandhi's close followers feel the loss acutely. The group he created in Parliament, the men and women he put into office elsewhere and his youthful adherents, are now a body without a head.

Inevitably, some people are flying kites by urging Mr Rajiv Gandhi, Sandjay's elder brother, to enter politics and somehow take up the reins. Some Youth Congress members, for example, have appealed to Mrs Gandhi to persuade Rajiv to go into politics and have signed their petition in blood. Mr Gaudhi could doubtless have his brother's parliamen-tary seat if he wapted. But the question of a political future she returned to for him is at the moment a January.—Reuter.

It is possible that Mrs.

She might feel happier if his person were of her blood. And it might be that Rajiv could enter politics out of a sonse of loyalty and due.

But Mrs Gandhi is not one to submit to pressure. She recently resisted a strong move to have Sanjay put into the top political job in the politic-ally important state of Uttar Pradesh.

There is, meanwhile, a call for Sanjay's widow, Maneks, to enter politics.

Such talk irritates some of Mrs Gandhi's Cabanet members. One of her ministers spoke in annoyance this weekend about such speculation. "Our party does not function like that," he said. "Voids are created and voids are filled."

whose election victory in Zimbabwe has once again raised hopes that the advant of black rule may not be too far away.
The only person who would appear to command nationwidesupport is Mr Nelson Mandela, leader of the barned African leader of the banned African National Congress (ANC), and he is serving a life sentence on Robben Island. Bishop Tutu has forecast that Mr Mandela will be Prime Minister of South Africa within five to ten years. Although such a forecast would seem to be hopelessly optim-istic, it does reflect a growing desire among blacks for a leader to emerge behind whom they can unite.

This is also reflected in the recent campaign for the release of Mr Mandels, which attracted a far wider support than pre-vious campaigns. The campaign was inspired not only by Mr Mugabe's success, but also, undoubtedly, by the growth in stature of the ANC following a series of guerrilla incidents With the virtual extinction of the Black Consciousness move-ment, there is increasing evidence that the ANC is becoming the main channel for radical black political expression. How-ever, the fact that the organization is banned has meant that though, is that many former Black Consciousness leaders are starting to abandon their notions of "black exclusiveness" and are instead walcoming whites who support their objectives—a course that has always been supported by the non-racial ANC.

If the blacks are leaderless and divided about the strategy to achieve their "liberation", there is considerable unanimity about what they feel the Government should do if a black-white confrontation, which so many people are predicting, is to be avoided.

Chief Buthelezi on one side and Bishop Tuxu on the other are united in their demands to abolish pass laws, stop population removals, declare a common criticenship for all South Africans, abolition of all forms of racial discrimination and convention of veue a national convention of all recognized leaders (including those in prison) to draw up a new constitution for the Most blacks also agree that despite the much vaunted claim by Dr Piet Koornhof, the Minister of Cooperation and Development, that "Apartheid is dying if not dead," there have been few improvements in their daily lives during the in their daily lives during the past four years. True, some of the old apartheid barriers are coming down in sport, in hotels and restaurants, and in some areas of economic life. Many urban blacks are earning con-siderably more than they used pass offences continues at over quarter of a million a year and the resettlement of blacks in impoverished "homelands" is going ahead unabated. More than 2.1 million people have already been moved during the past 15 years, 1.7 million still have to be uprooted. The black man is a third class citizen.

For the great majority the status quo remains unchanged. The number of arrests for

In fact current moves by the Government to modify spar-theid by implementing some of the recommendations made by the Rickert and Wichahn Comthe Rickert and Wiehahn Com-missions into influx control and labour legislation, will have the effect of turning blacks into third and fourth class "non-cisizens". What the Govern-ment is trying to do is divide blacks into "haves"—the 4.5 million urban blacks living in Sowett and other townsisps, whose labour is required to keep the South African economy going—and the "have nots", remaining 15.5 million rural blacks who will be forced to live in the overcrowded, im-poverished "homelands". More than half South Africa's total population is to be squeezed into less than 14 per cent of its land area.

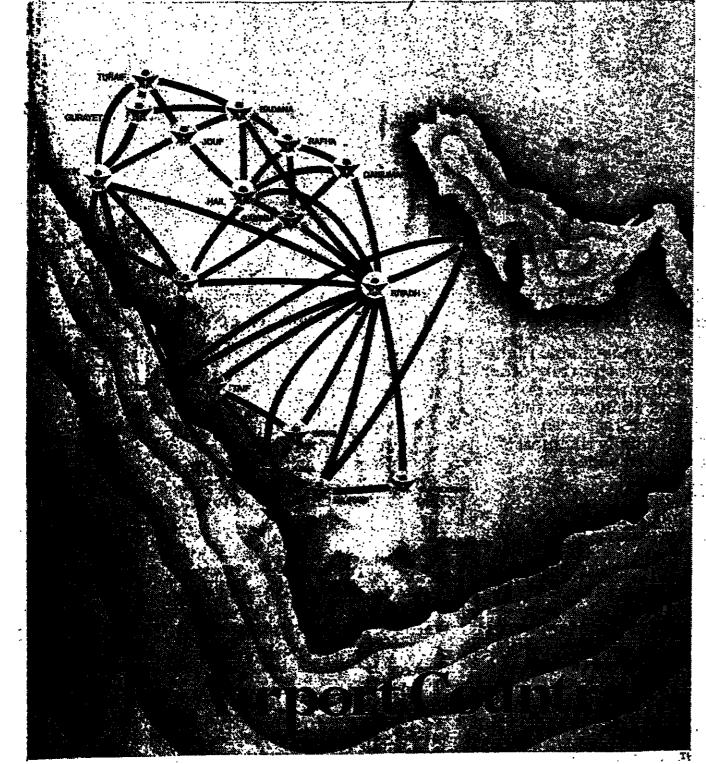

The dream of verligte (more moderate) Afrikaner nationalists such as Mr Pieter Botiz, the Prime Minister, is to establish a stable, prosperous, well-educated black maddle class which could act as a buffer between whites and smittant black remonalists. Such bourgeois

They would then have great an interest as the whites in supporting this modified form of apartheid—or so the theory goes.

However, this strengey has several flaws. First, it is doubtful whether urban blacks can be bought off in this way because, although they will be better off than their impover-island rured compatriots, they will be inferior to whitee. They will be inferior to whitee. They are incread likely to seek more effective channels through which to express themselves such as the trades unions, which are becoming increasingly mili-tant and which have been ex-hibiting real mucks during the recent series of suriles and work boycoms,

Second, by herding "uneco-momic" blacks off to rural areas where there is no employment, no food and no hope, the Government will be producing the pre-conditions for social unrest and guerilla intursions. The war in Zimbabwe was won The war in Zimbabwe was won in the countryside and not in the towns, and it is likely that in South Africa guerillas will operate chrough these resertlement areas, some of which are not far from cities like Pretoria, Diritan and Port Elizabeth.

Argentine military leaders claim that one cannot understand or judge the "excesses" of anti-terrorism if one forgets that Argentina was in a state of civil war; the survival itself of civilized suciety was at stake, as a result of the barbarous deeds of the terrorists,

But many others, and not just the relatives of the Desaphreentos (disappeared ones) believe that the truth must be revealed before Argen-tina is started on the path to a normal, democratic life otherwise the seeds of hate and violence will remain and produce new horrors. While the press is necessarily mostly silent about this problem (one exception is the English-language daily the Buenos Aires Herald, which continues to show remarkable courage), the true feelings of many Argentines occasionally come to the surface. I shall onore a few sentences from a drum ttic article by a journalist, Manfred Schoenfeld, recently published in that great old paper La Prensa under the title: "The disappeared. The voice of conscience continues speaking, even if the curtain

Senor Schoenfeld says the following: "The authorities beleive that they have succeeded in uprooting the bad plant of terrorist guerrillas, and so far the facts seem to bear them out. So far the military authorities have chosen to be silent about the fate of the "dis-appeared"; by talking ob-scurely about those who are "absent for ever", the junct seems indeed to confirm the worst fears about their fate. By so doing they may be taking upon themselves respon-sibilities which exceed their The military insists, never-theless, that if the Argentines want to go back to civilian rule, they must first accept that any-thing that happened during the repression must be forgotten and forgiven. Is that really

The political leaders Argentina's traditional parties do not refuse in principle the possibility of accepting a lew del olvido tlaw of oblivion, if det oftendo traw of observous, in that is the price to be paid to return to democracy. During my stay in Buenos Aires I have talked to many leading politicians, including President Videla, former Presidents Lanusse and Frondizi, and Admiral Massera, who was a Mussera, who was a member of the junta during the repression but is now a very active politician, aiming to become the leader of a new democratic movement with an dential elections (when he believes General Videla may believes, well be the candidate of another official right-wing movement, supporting the armed forces).

I have also spoken to the leader of the Peronist party. Deolindo Bittel; of the Radical Party, Ricardo Balbin and Raúl Alfonsin: of the Intransigent Party. Oscar Alende: of the Social Democrats, Americo Social Democrats, Américo Ghioldi They all admitted that a national reconciliation is necessary. Most seemed quite ready to accept a lev del olvido. Senor Balbin told me: "I

General Lanusse: believes reconciliation can be achieved.

But it is difficult to make peace with ghosts: Peace must made with the real people. with the people's legitimate political organizations, its parties and unions. A great political debate must be started. The one going on now is just a dialogue of the deaf.

Many believe that full reconciliation can only come after truth about excesses is told

"Everything will have to be settled before an election, otherwise we shall start it all over again. And we shall have to reach an honourable agree-ment, not a capitulation."

But while the political leaders say they are ready to "turn the page" for what happened during the fight against ter-rorism, they reject the second condition which is put by the military for a return to civilian rule. The politicians say that the military cannot claim for role in the Argentina of to-morrow, allowing it some powers upon civilian institutions—it would have instead to submit to presidential and congressional power.

But if that happens, would they not risk—in spite of present promises—being prose-cuted for their past actions by a new, sovereign democratic power? This is exactly what happened in Bolivia, where the first freely elected parliament threatened to prosecute the military dictator, former General Banzer.

down Argentina's return to democratic rule. Finding a way out will not be easy. Former President Lanusse, a retired general, who is still occasionally consulted by the present military rulers, would like the juota to fix a date for the country's return to a demo-cratic life (but President Videla himself told me this cannot yet be done). He would also like the military to abandon its present arrogance, so that forgiveness becomes possible. If everybody accepts some share of guilt, he says, reconciliation can be achieved.

General Lanusse is entitled to preach peace: bis daughter-in-law bas been confined for 10 years to a wheelchair, as a result of an act of terrorism, while one of his dearest friends, a journalist Edgardo Sajón was one of the innocent victims of military repression. General Lanusse was the only military leader who seriously tried to reconcile Peronists and anti-Peronists. In 1973 he re-turned political power to the civilians: the Peronists won the election and Peron came back to Argentina, Unfortunately, it all ended in more bloodshed and another military coup. But, in spice of that failure, it is impossible to think of a normali-cation of political life in Argen-tina unless a similar attempt to reconcile the two halves of Argentina's political society is tried once more. Such an attempt may be more successful now that it was in 1973, according to General Lanusse. Everybody has been taught a very bitter lesson and The "Banzer complex" or knows the importance of "Nuremberg complex" of the political compromises. Also, military is certainly slowing Peron is dead; so is the terrorist Peron is dead; so is the terrorist wing of the Peronist movement

The Peronists can no longer live on the Perón myth, and they now hate terrorism, which has cost them all their hardly reality, they will have to change, and it is possible that they finally become a normal, democratic workers' party: this hope is shared by many people in Arzentina.

But the keys to Argentina's future are still in the hands of the military leaders. Military rule has not been a success. rule has not been a success. The Argentines resent, beyond the ferocity of anti-terrorist repression, the harshness of an authoritanian rule which has destroyed old and cherished democratic rights. They also believe that the military Government's economic policy is becoming a burnel failure.

becoming an abysmal failure. The military uself seems to know that its present rule cannot go on for ever, that a return to democracy must be prefered. The Argentine para-dox—the case of a rich and highly civilized nation, which unable to produce a democratic political -has become more and system more absurd and unacceptable. It has turned, in the seventies, from what looked like a tragedies of our time. Demo-cracy has not been able so far to provide an answer to Argentina's problems, but the military has also repeatedly failed in its efforts to provide Argentina with a political system.

To this day, Peron remains the only military leader who real popularity founded a successful political movement. Although the present military leaders toy with the idea of "staying in politics", they have no chance of repeating Peron's achievements, and they must know it. But they are afraid of the consequences for themselves (as well as, they say, for their country) of abandoning power. This fear threxens to waste favourable circumstances which now exist for a stable return to democracy: the most important one being the universal desire for peace and political stability. If the military really wants to start a new "historical cycle", it should begin by tel-ling the truth about what happened during the repression—even if all it may be able to produce by now are the lists of the dead. The attempt to remove and suppress the truth for ever could only have trauniatic and dramatic conse-quences for Argentina — and would certainly fail.

Along came Jones to the top of the world place, but once there he had a lonely drive all the way to the finish. Behind him Arnoux thwarted every effort of Carlos Reutemann to move his Williams up from sixth place: they spent the entire race running virtually nose to tail and the order was the same at the finish with the Renault just a few feet alread. Arnoux had had to carry the flag for the Renault ream singlehanded, for once again. Jeanne Pierre Jabouille had cruel misfortune, his car breaking its gearbox a few yards from the stardine. Alan Jones finds himself at the top of the world championship table this evening for the second time in a month, and this time no amount of wrangling as to the legality of the race he has just won, will rob him of his hard earned points. Having been victorious in the Spanish Graud Prix, only to find it removed from the championship calendar, he took on and best the powerful Lieler team and beat the powerful Ligier team today to beat Didier Pironi to the line in the French Grand Prix by four and a half seconds to take a three point lead in the championship table.

Jones had to play a waiting game today, having been bearen off the line by pole-position man lacques Laffite and his Ligier partner Pironi as well as by Rene Arnoux in the turbocharged Renault. At first Arnoux played into Laffite's hands insofar as he allowed him to take a clear lead as the Renault, quick down the long straight, tended to hold up the following cars through the twisty parts of the course. Laffite bufft a cushion of over five seconds in as many laps, and with Pironi by then in second place ahead of Jones, and Arnoux holding off Piquet and Reutemann, the Ligier drivers looked to be in a strong position to withstand any attack which might come from the Saudia Leyland team.

cars, the race served to demonstrate a gradual return to competitiveness of the McLaren team. Although Alain Prost, who had been seventh fastest in practice, was an early retirement with steering trouble, John Watson trok on and beat the Arrows of Riccardo Patrese and Jochen Mass to finish seventh ahead of Gilles Villeneuve, whose fighting performance in his Ferrari was a highspot of the afternoon.

Both Alfa Romeos also made highspot of the afternoon.

Both Alfa Romeos also made stops for new tyres and later abandoned, the two Lotuses were out within the first 18 laps, and Zumino's Brabham only lasted to the end of the pits wall on the first lap. The FittipaldI team were also out of luck, Rosberg spinning off backwards on lap nine and Emerson FittipaldI having to abandon his car just two laps from the end. Now the world championsing battle moves to Brands Hatch, where the British Grand Prix will take place on Sunday week on a circuit which seems likely to emphasise once again the competitiveness of the six drivers who collected points here this afternoon and who currently head the championship table so compre-

Minter by a mile-now for the Hagler footage

By Srikinnar Sen

Alan Minter, Britain's undis-puted world champion, who realned his tide at Wembley by destroying the challenger, Vito Anthofermo, in one round and forcing the Italian's corner to retire him after eight, will meet the No 1 contender Marvin Hagler, of the United States, at Earl's Court or Queen's Park Rangers' ground in September.

After Saturday night's defence Minter is entitled under WBC rules to do as he pleases for a year, but the WBA rules require a champlon to defend in eix months. To keep the title unified, Minter has agreed to make the defence in the shorter time.

Bob Arum, president of Top Rank Inc. said he would make "all the Hagler-film footage that we have" available to Minter and if he can make the right battle plan, as he did this time, he can win. No one would have realized that Minter would have had such an intelligent battle plan. He rurned an even match into a had such an intelligent battle plan. He turned an eyen match into a ront."

Minter's plan was so well conceived and executed that the concest was over in the first round when he stood his ground against the first terrifying charge by the Italian and jangled his thought with a right. The fact that the Englishman split the conker case by the right eye in this round was a windfall, and Minter seized on it by turning the first crimson stream into a fiash flood over the next seven rounds; with the doctor

Miss Anderson, aged 22 from California, was only the second woman long-jumper to leap soven metres or more and her jump was the best in the world this year. Watched by a lively crowd of 16,000, Miss Anderson, who won the pentathlon last Saturday, neared her own American record of 6.90m in her fourth jump. She cleared 6.89m but was given the red no-jump flag. She made no mistake in her next attempt, however, with exactly seven metres. The only other woman to have cleared the seven metres mark is the Soviet world record holder, Vilma Badausklen. Her world mark, set at the 1978 Prague European championships. Cup final price structure may not change

Suppporters should not have to pay more to wanth next year's PA Cup final. The FA mach and grounds committee, who met in Harrogate yesterday, recommended no change in the price structure, that groduced receipts of £750,000 at last season's final between West Ham United and Arsenal. The decision has to be ratified by the full FA council. If it is, it would mean a loss or as much as £150,000 in Wembley receipts next season, and the FA's secretary. Ted Croker, believes the FA could stand to lose another six-figure sum by a change in the sami-final rules, At Saturday's council meeting it was agreed that extra time will, if necessary, be played in the first cup semi-final meetings. This follows last season's seven-hour semi-final between Arsenal and Liverpool. Mr Croker said: "As much as £100,000 in lost revenue, could be involved, but we strongly feel there are other considerations, apart from financial ones. We must take supporters into account. When you have north v south semi-finals both sets of supporters have to travel long distances, and we feel it is only fair to play an extra half-hour in the first match."

The council expressed "concern at the appalling behaviour of a handful of fans." during England's European championship tie with Belgium in Turin. The FA were fined £8,000 because of the incidents and lir Croker and his colleagues are preparing a dossier, which they will probably present to UEFA Mr Croker said: "We feel that other factors inflenced the finish consul on the spot to trace the movements of fans before the match."

He confirmed that the FA have made a formal application to stage the 1984 European championship finals and said that an England ander-19 side will enter next year's world youth tournament in Australia, Other decisions taken at Saturday's council meeting included the reelection of Sir Harold Thompson and Mr Arthur McMullen as chairman and vice-cheirman respectively. Casse Tête at head of a heavy homeward beat By John Nichells

Casse Tête, owned by David Johnson, won a punishing off-shore race for the Morgan Cup which finished at Gosport yesterday. Organized by the Royal Ocean Racing Chub, the 210-mile race started on Friday evening when 75 entries came to the line. Less than half of these boats completed the course which, apart from the final stages, was sailed throughout in strong westerly winds.

The weather favoured the larger yachts, for not only did they survive the seas better, but soon after the first of them finished on Saturday night, the wind lightened and headed, so that the later finishers progressively became more spread out.

This was one of the few long-distance races in the season that was open to the smallest offshort boats of all, and several members of the Jusico Offshore Group took part. Unfortunately the weather was not kind to them, and they all retired after the first long, windward leg. This was a dead beat from the Nab Tower to the Shambles Buoy (off Portland Bill) into a wind of up to force eight and large, uncomfortable seas.

Even class I boats, which started with class 2, were affected by the conditions and Marionstite (Christopher Duming) retired at this point. Another of Casse Tête's few rivals for fastest elapsed time also departed for

It was shortly after rounding the Nab Tower, after a fast spimaker reach from the start at Gosport, that the collision occurred, which led to the retirement of both boats. Once clear of the Shambles Buoy, those still in the race had a close fetch across the Channel to Cherbourg, and then a spimaker reach back to the Nab Tower and the finish. This was a slow-scoring battle, the account not being opened until hallway through the second chukks when Cowdray's superb geemal Antonio Herrera, found Stowell's flags. Before the end of the fifth and penultimate chukka, Herrera scored two more goals, and Paul Withers one. But Withers, who was playing hell-for-leather at three, crossed his opponents' line several times and twice gave away 60-yard penalty goals (taken by Eddie Moore).

So, the sixth chukks opened with 4-4 on the scoreboard, Then Withers got his own back from a 60-yard penalty after an infringement by Moore, and this was followed with a runaway goal by Churchward, to give Cowdray their decisive triumph and end a close-fought tussle.

The finalists in the Hathurst Cup (the totrumment subsidiary for teams knocked out in the early rounds) were Galen Weston's Roundwood Park and Los Locos, that very determined husband-andwite team, in which Simon and Claire Tomiliuson are supported by their friend David Gematell and Jamie Mackay, a very useful sevengoaler from Australia. The low (18-goal) team aggregate of Los Locos started them with a lead of 44 goals. Patterson, who had an uneven game, had a lot of untidy ball to contend with at rucks and lineouts. Campbell, who took a masty knock to the head early on, received a short, patchy service and as a result trequently took the ball standing sull or too close, for the tirst time since his arrival Dodge seemed uncertain, and Gravell offered courage and determination but little subtlety, Irvine and Itay tackled well but tended to misjudge their clearance kacks. Among the forwards, Squire was a force in the loose and O'Driscoll and Tucker fulfilled their roles, meaning that Serfongin and Roba took filled their roles, meaning that Serfontein and Botha vere con-stantly harassed into error.

Morne du Plesas was magnifi-cent in tidving no potentially dangerous situations for South Africa and was a wonderfully colming influence when tempers threatened to get out of hand. Both teams, in fact, are fortunate in their captains. It was not the day for the South Africas bath in their captams. It was not the day for the South African backs to show their running qualities but their workrate and commitment in defence were outstanding. Malan made a good impression when he replaced Kahts as hower shortly before half-time. Kahts retired with a rib injury that could keep him out of the final international in a fortnight's time.

South Africa's winding score came with an abruptness that stunned the senses. Under further pressure Botha cleared upfield and to the left. Woodward tamely helped the ball into touch around the Liuns' 22. Germishuys had chased and it was he who retrieved the ball and took an instinctive short throw-in to Stotiberg, the first to reach the score, the first to reach the score, the first to reach the score, the other forwards, of both sides were almost withing wearily up the field and it was to the credit of Stofiberg, a lock by inclination and a much criticized choice at flank, that he was there to receive the ball. He made a few strides and then, challenged by Woodward, the only Lion within miles, passed back to Germishuys, who flashed across to score. Botha kicked a magnificent touchline conversion. There followed a series of desparate attacks by the Lions, to no avail, Campbell being wide once with a feesible penalty.

Dublin, June 29 Esson Derby form was turned upside down at the Currach yesterday when the often pramising but frequently disappointing Tyrnaros at last showed samething narus at last showed scarething positive in an astonishingly uneventul metreenth renewal of the Irish Sweeps Darby. Tyrnavos had finished as far both as twelfth to Henbit in the English Darby and five of those who had finished a substantial distance in front of him were among the dozen opponents vanquished at the Currach and none of them got into the first three.

There was more action in the loading area than in the race itself and Greville Starkey was unshipped as Rankin already installed, backed violently. However, once they had all been put back again they broke to a level start but with nobody anxious to

Murray knew exactly what he was doing though and when garly in the straight a group of challengers, headed by the favourite Master Willie, closed shargly, Murray got an immediate response from Tyrnavos and doubling his advantage in a matter of strides confortably withstood the late challenge of Prince Pre by one and a half lengths with Ramian another two and a half lengths away in third.

A league spokesman said yesterday: "Huyton have been ordered to attend this special meeting. They were told that the league wanted assurances from them at the amual meeting last Friday, but the club didn't send a representative. We want a definite answer this week."

The spokesman said no dates for matches with France in the international championship next season would be confirmed until the representatives of the two bodies had met to discuss the problem of violence in France. This came to a head last season in the match between England and France at Narbonne, when the referee. Mr Billy Thompson of Huddersfield, and the English players had to be locked in their rooms for 90 minutes after the match and guarded by French police.

The league wanted the matter settled at a meeting in May, but France did not respond to their invitation to attend.

Britain's juniors send Hungary unpacking

The defeat of the Hungarian Olympic cight by the British junior eight over the senior distance of 2,000 metres restarday was the constation of the Notting-hindary International Regarda-The British Olympic eight dominated from the start and cruised hung four lengths over the aneut nated from the start and crused home four lengths over the spent Magners. But it was the performance of the Eritish judiors that won the day. They kept the Hungarians at bay throughout, crossing the line ahead of them by almost three-quarters of a length

The two British eights are colding forward now to the Mos-cow Olympic Regatta and the unior championships in Belgium; innior championships in Belgium; but the new Hungarian Olympic crew must be wondering whether it is worth while packing their suitasses for Moscow.

Hungary's only win in four races over the weekend was by their non-ranked scullar Odor, who weeks ago and fluished third in the final on the second day, three lengths adrift of the winner.

The Henley intelligence must have more on this sculler than my records. It would seem inconceivable that the Henley network would confuse Gille with Norway's would confuse Gille with Norway's their non-ranked scullar Odor, who vesterday took the single sculls ahead of two Belgians. Herley-bound crews who impressed were the Canadian/Ridley Graduate Boat Club, who start in the Prince Philip, and their undergraduates ", Ridley College School, who move up to make a strong challenge for the women's challenge plate this week. Wallingford School also impressed, finishing second, three lengths behind Ridley Graduates in the open coxed fours, and lengths behind Ridley Graduates in the open coxed fours, and could make their presence felt in Henley's Britannia. But the Nottinghamshire International is sensitive to having its regatta inevitably used as a preview for Henley Royal Regatta. Next year it moves to an earlier date and may establish itself a san early-season international test attracting Europe's elite.

The Grand and Stewards' were The Grand and Stewards' were the main casualties before the Heniev Royal Regatta draw on Saturday, with 50 pe reent or more minurawais. But the quality of the Grand, accepting that the Bri-tish Olympic eight were always non-starters, retains, thanks to international politics, a high stan-dard.

The former United States Olympic eight are poised at the top half of the draw to meet the survivors of New Zealand and an enigmatic West German crew. The Prince Philip, too, promises to be exceptional with Britain's Olympic non-travelling reserves. Kingston, the only home crew with seemingly a chance of capturing a major Henley trophy against strong international competition from two US crews, Canada and New Zealand

Ind.
The Diamonds draw appears well-balanced with the former world finalist Ibarra (Argentina) and the world lightweight champion Beldent (US) at the top and the former Diamonds winner Hale (Australia) in the other half. (Australia) in the other half. A surprise selection is Gilje (Norway). Gilje failed to make the "lightweight" final on the first day in Lucerne two weeks ago and have more on this sculler than my records. It would seem inconceivable that the Henley network would confuse Gilje with Norway's Olympic gold medal winner. Hansen, whose entry arrived too late for acceptance for the Royal Regatta. Hansen, by coincidence in Lucerne, failed to make the fluid on day one in the "heavyweight" single sculls and also by chance finished third on the second day.

weight "single sculls and also by chance finished third on the second day.

The Canadian double scullers, Walter and Ford, also might feel aggrieved at being passed over, having reached the finals on both days in Lucerne and bearing the holders of the Double Sculls Challenge Cup, Baillieu and Clark, of Britain, Overall the Henley powers that he seem to have chosen well. The importance of the Continental connexion

Peter Ryde
The Comment of Europe's meeting with Great Britain and Ireland at Royal St George's last weekend had two finishes. The cold factual result came at midday when the home team by winning the first four foursomes ensured victory, having 16 points out of a possible 30. The se cond finish came six hours later when, in a light comparable to the interior of Chartres hours later when, in a light con-parable to the interior of Chartres Cathedral on a February morning, and a temperature about the same, Timo Sipponen beat the English champion. Roger Chapman. Sipponnen, the first Finnish golfer to play for Europe, narrowly escaped setting off with 15 clubs and took time to settle down, but he finished like a tiger winning three of the last four holes in fours.

three of the last four holes in fours.

Hardly less surprising was the defeat of Britain's strokeplay specialist, Gordon Br and, by a young Italian Andreas Canessa. Brand's was indeed a tale of woe—a six at the last, out of bounds at the 14th, and a penalty stroke when his ball moved at the address on the fourth green, exactly as it on the fourth green, exactly as it had done the day before. The crowd, estimated at the height of the afternoon at 10, had long since dispersed but these results and others, including notably the win of Jan Robe over the British champion, Duncan Evans, gave the Continent victory in the last series by 64 to 34 and restored colour by 64 to 34 and restored colour to the cheeks of their supporters.

The Coutinental revival could not conceal the fact that the home countries had played their best on the way to victory. Aithough the nature of the match made it impossible to learn just how good our own players could be. McEvoy alone won full points but young Rafferty was unbeaten with three points and a half, the half coming from the best match of the final afternoon against Tim Planchin, of France, and Duncan Evans, playing top, lost only when his team had won.

The Conentinent had to accept that until their spirited recovery they had been close to their worst result in the series at a time when Continental golf is showing signs of growing strength. Elated by the final series their captain, Franco Bevione, took the view that they ha dneedd more time to plexities of such a championship

Course in the wind.

The senior statesman among their players, Alexis Godillor, pointed to the difficulty of finding the 10 best players at any given countries who want to take part; the fixtures are not besmirched by politics, yet the European federation consists of 20 nations, the only absentees being those not free to join. The Commental consecuence of the provider is as improved.

There was many another shot from Skerritt to tell of a lifetime spent in the game. Indeed, there was a time when Skerritt and his spren brothers all played to handicaps of five or better.

Skerritt had started badly yesterday—four, five, four, six against the card of four, four, four—but, after finding sand with his second to the seventh, he never missed another green. However, the former world semior champion, who will be 64 this October, is showing no signs of fatigue, his 39 on the homeward half yesterday owing more to a lean spell with his putter than anything else. Pete Cooper won the American semiors when he was over 60 and one can see no reason why Panton, who was once a good enough footballer to have trials with Hiberman and Dundee, should not carry on with the good work today.

Pessimistic mood swept away by Humpage

BIRMINGHAM: Warnickshire (4 ps; beat Middleser by five wickets

Thrilling stuff, with Humpage the diero of the 10,000 crowd as Warelckshire proved the irresistible John Player force and for the second time in five days Middlesex became. a movable one-day object. For once it was pleasant to be turned away at the car park gate by a ruefully apologetic attendant, and to see the queues still entering Egbaston half an hour after the start of play. The big crowd witnessed a gripping match well worthy of its advance notices.

Warwickshire made an excellent start when Radley was caught at third man, a diving catch by Rouse off: Willis, but Brearley and Barlow were unroubled and uninhibited as they took the score to 94, and Brearley completed a stylish 50.

At 94 Doshi came on to bowl is seemingly improving left arm stylish 50.

At 94 Doshi came on to bowl his seemingly inpocuous left arm spinners. From his second delivery Brearley tried to sweep him on the leg side and heard the death rattle behind nim. The 100 went up in the twenty-second over, but Doshi turned one sharply outside leg stump and Gatting departed in like manner to his captain.

Ferreira skittled Gould, but Barlow was in full spate, looking to hit every ball and galloping between the wickets. He celebrated his 50 by lifting Ferreira for an effortless six to midwicket and although he should have been sumped off the teasing Doshi when 67 he was twice unlucky in that he missed his century by six runs, and had his splendid effort blunted by Hampage's matchwinning innings.

Butcher also helped to push the score along at a rate of nearly 5.5 runs an over, and the target looked beyond the hopes of the more pessimistic Warwickshire suporters. Pessimism seemed justified when three Warwickshire suporters, including that of Amiss, fell for 37 runs, since Amiss was expected to provide the impetus to the Warwickshire innings.

hit two offside fours from Emburey, and Warwickshire's innings suddenly moved into gear. The rowering van der Bilj had two stentorian shouts for Ibw against Oliver, and when bom were rejected he looked as if he would like to pick up Van Geloven and pur him in his pocket.

Oliver, taking his cue from Humpage, used his feet to hit Emburey for two rattling fours, and when Oliver was run out Maynard and the South African, Ferreira, joined forces consecutively with Humpage, who was now going like a train and attacking every bowler. Hove, They sped to 88 for two off 1. 16 overs in pursuit of 163, but were then amde to struggle as p wickets tumbled. Botham was in great form, taking two wickets for 21, holding two carches, achieving t a run-out, and hammering 26 breezy runs.

Sussex had to battle for runs. from the beginning, Botham, having Mendis caught by Taylor off the second ball of the match, Booth Jones, however, had a resuntiable escape off a mishit when three fieldsmen, including Taylor, converged on a sider, only to leave it to each other. Phillipson and Wells delighted the crowd with a fifth-wicket stand of 61.

An undefeated century by Javed Miandad could not prevent the West Indians racing to a five-wicket victory against Glamorgan in their one-day match at Swat-sea. Miandad hit the West Indian fast bowlers all over the field with dazzling strokes. He hit a six with dazzling strokes. He hit a six and 13 fours in his 101, which took Glamorgan to 209 for five. But the result never looked in doubt as Haynes and Bacchus strode impressively to 157 before falling to successive balls. Bacchus hit three sixes and seven fours in his 79 and Haynes seven forus in 71. Three omre wickets fell cheaply, but the tourists reached their target with more than five overs to spare.

Worcester's castle falls to purposeful siege

NORTHAMPTON: Northampton-shire (4 pts) beat Worcestershire by goen the less. Northamptonshire maintained their challenge in the John Player League with a conformable victory against Worcestershire at the County ground yeaterday. Runs were a rare commodity as bowlers made line light moore around discontertingly in a heavy atmosphere and off a difficult pinch, but Northampsonabire, with greater purpose and inspired by Allan Lamb and Williams, clinched victory with aix overs to spare. Worcestersities were without victory with six overs to spare.

Wortesterstire were without; their captain, Gifford, who is suffering from a strained groin, and Turner, who hurriedly left Northampton early in the morning for Wortester where his wife is expecting a haby. When Hemsley won the toss and chose to ber, Turner's absence was to be keenly felt at Northampton-shire's bowlers parcelled up the first five batsmen for 47 runs in 18 overs.

Ormrod, Hemsley and Jones had their castles knocked over; Neale fell leg before, and the potentially dangerous Youns was brilliantly caught, one-handed, by Cook at short extra cover. Parel fell leg before, and the porenially dangerous. Youris was brilliantly caught, one-handed, by Cook at short extra cover. Parel and the left-handed Humphries momentarily halted the bowler's advance, putting on 34 runs in 12 overs for the sixth wicket. Then Humphries fell leg before to Willey and once again Worcestershire were floundering in all sorts of trouble. With the score at 95, Patel offered a simple carch to Willey at mid off. At the same score, Alleyne sent the ball soaring skywards and Tim Lamb; on the boundary at long on, made light of a difficult carch. When Inchmore fell leg before. Larkins had taken three wickets in five balls, and when Allan Northamptonshire's bowlers had certainly done well. It was now up to the batsmen to sentle the matter. Larkins pitched the right note but fell to a catch behind in the eighth over with the score 22 and a subdued Willey departed in the same way in the morn over. Reaching the boundary across a slow outfield had been something of an achievement. Yet, with two brisk, powerful strokes, Allan Lamb beat the field to find a way through and prove that it could be done. In the 17th over, Cook became the tinird wicket to fall with 50 runs needed still. But that was to be the extend of Worcestershire's success as Lamb, and Williams inched their way towards their target.

Fastest century of season from Richards

Vivian Richards unveiled his latest masterpiece when he hit the fastest century of the season, in 66 minutes, against Glamorgen at Swansea on Saturday—even though it took him 18 minutes to mough it took man is manues to get off the mark., The West Indian hit nine sixes and nine fours, completing his 100 off just 50 balls. His last 75 runs came off 27 scoring shots in 25 minutes bails. His jast 75 runs came off 27 scoring shots in 25 minutes Richards was out for 100, stumped by Eifion Jones off Lloyd, and he was not the only hausman to punish Glamorgan's howling. Haynes weighed in with 82 and Kallicharran hit. 58, as the West Indies rattled up 296 for five off 66 overs in 220 minutes.

The Warwickshire and England fast bowler, Willis snapped up three wickers for 22 in seven overs, to leave championship leaders, Middlesex, struggling at 125 for five at Edgbaston. Rouse took two wickers but Barlow came to the rescue with an unbeaten 50, to steer Middlesex to 157 for five at the close.

Larkins hit 10 fours in 78 as Northamptonshire made rapid progress against Worcestershire at Northampton.

Although Fugard writes in the English language he firmly believes that "my essential cultural identity is that of an Afrikaner".

The truth about my country is that some of the most significant resistance and fight and opposition ance and fight and opposition in terms of the system has in fact come from Afrikaners. It is these little nuances, subtleties and complexities that are missed outside, and make certain situations awkward for me, as, for instance, when people try to over-simplify and see white simply as oppressor and black as victim. There is that line of Gladys's—and I almost thought I was sticking out my neck in writing it, but it is interesting in terms of the responses it has already got and continues to get-when she confronts Steve and says: 'I've got my own story. I don't need yours. It might be hard for you to accept, Steven, but you are not the only one who has been hurt. Politics and black

"South Talk turns to South Africa and the way the world views its problems. Despite this, Fugard continues to hope. The energy used by those who have over the years

South Africa that it would be very easy to hand yourself over

Laughter is the major weapon in the play's armoury weapon in the plays armoury and the absurd appearance of Neil Johnston carrying vegetables from the garden works its way from a joke to the borrific. The secret of the garden's abundance is not the rain which continues through the play, but something in the nature of a sacrifice. When Mr Rea wills his house to the barbaric grandson, played by Philip Davis, the crime is bearing its final fruit.

The numbing slowness of Nancy Diuguid's production is fair to the text, and its lingering looks at silent frustration belp to expose the play's flimsy

Herr Kroetz would have us believe that the servile petriness of the husband is economic, which it may be, but his proof of an inner life is trite evidence of private fantasies in which the man sees himself as famous. Bavarian RSO/ Kubelik Festival Hall

The famous "cry of a deeply wounded heart" that opens the last movement of Mahler's first symphony seemed, in Friday's performance by the Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra, more argonized than I ever remember it, more obviously the expression of a sudden awareness of a terrible reality. For as he began that movement Rafael Kubelik seemed, like a Tristan tearing off his bandages, to be exposing wounds bitherto contained or concealed.

This was not simply because the finale was played so pas-sionately, or because it was at a fuller fortissimo than anything that had gone before.
Rather it was that the earlier music had been so vividly drawn, so richly laden with musical metaphor. It was an open-hearted performance, full of suggestion and imagery: from the urgent, chattering whisper of the clarinets at the beginning and the abundant nature poetry of the early pages

(not for nothing does MT Kubelik know the Bohemian woods and fields from which Mabler came), to the sweet and shy easing in of the nature music, from the hearty peasant danging of the Scheme and the dancing of the Scherzo and its lazily affectionate trio, altifost Rosenkavalier-like in its sensuousness, to the exquisite grief of the slow movement.

The orchestra is not a virtuoso one in the common sense; but in Mr Kubelik's hands it is truly virtuoso in its achievement of expression through phrasing, gradation and colour. The violins are marvellously silky; the brass are biting and precise, with some piantssimo magic from the horns; and the woodwinds are prepared to forego simplle euphony for the sake of what Mr Kubelik is seeking.

—I am thinking, for example, of the pungency and edge of some of the clariner playing.

The evening began with Mozarr's Jupiter Symphony, done with an unfashionable emphasis on the first violin line, but with enough style and elegance to justify it; and the generous observance of repeats, including both in the finale, helped ensure that the work had due weight and powerful proportions.

Bruson/Sheppard Wigmore Hall

Barry Millington

One of the less happy aspects of the great flowering of Italian opera in the nineteenth century is that it swamped the art of solo song writing, which rose to such heights in Germany and France. Some of the more durable examples of the art in Italy were composed by Fran-cesco Paolo Tosti and seven of these were included in Renato Bruson's recital on Friday evening. Craig Sheppard was the accompanist.

It was not entirely to his discredit that songs by Tosri, Donizetti and Verdi emerged often as little more than scaled down operatic numbers, for there is not the matching of verse and music, or the inte-grated accompaniments, that characterized the finest Lieder and Melodies. But Mr Bruson can be blamed for his failure to vary the tonal colour according in the sense of the words. An unhelpful programme gave the lyrics (sometimes in the wrong ignics (sometimes in the wrong language) and a symposis instead of a line-for-line translation. Yet maybe it was not so unhelpful, since Mr Bruson's object was clearly not to worry about individual phrases, let alone words, provided that the sense of the verse came over in a generalized way. a generalized wav. For a fiercely partiran audience Mr Bruson could do

Mr Bruson's voice is an instrument of great wonder, and he unfurls it in streams of pure. almost incredibly even tone. If one is prepared to set aside the meticulous standards usually applied to the interpretation of solo song, and not to demand that the performer project any more of himself than his exquisitely beautiful voice, then this is singing that can give immense satisfaction.

. . in an attitude of indecision, confronted by choice. Not, of course, a very serious choice, unless you wish to read it symbolically; but not, you will agree, on uncommon one. A lot of time is spent in such attitudes, but many of us would not care to admit it.

Note four things: the assumption of complicity between nacrator and reader; the disingenuous reference to symbolism from a novelist whose use of the metaphor is unusually sharp; the plump, comfortable, almost Edwardian tone; and, above all, the overwhelming presence of the novelist herself. sudden appearances of a rarive "I" from time to narranye time in the text are as dis-concerting as a face peering through from the other side of a Ebrary shelf. Equally so are the frequent switches of tense and the occasional lapses of grammar, not to mention received notions such as that The Times was "on strike" in 1979. But then again perhaps she does not, or maybe only a little, and then, of course, not the mysterious Hugo, who had an arm blown off being brave in Ethiopa, knows about Kurds, and adores her. Kate Arm-strong spends the entire novel in a bright dither about one thing or another and never sees one or two answers to a question if three or even four seem to offer more interesting possibilities for committed inertia.

Kate is a liberated Sunday columnist approaching 40, mother of three, and fed up. She is fed up with women's problems, with her morning hate mail, her ex-husband, the fear and ugliness in London, her own ignorance, her maso-chism, herself. (But never with her children: families are wonderful; only marriage is nor.) Hugo's wife, the academic Judith, describes Kate as "the kind of woman who has messed everything up "—for other women, she meens. Most men and many women will agree. Kate's crisis of futility, which began with the abortion of a bastard foetus with spina bifida, darkens to the point where real preakdown seems possible— punks, racism, graffiti, street dangers and the domestic violence of others contort luridly in the background—so that it is even more surprising when, by a series of fortuitous encounters—a painting by Claude, a shocking accident to

Such a risky business, interpreting the complexities of the characters in Hamlet

Permit me to announce my retirement from the stage. Nowadays Shakespeare acting is altogether too brave an art for me. No sooner had I signed than I hegan to regret introducing Mr Milton Shulman's prose to Pseuds Corner; and throughout rehearsals my recurrent thoughts were: in a film you can do it again, at a poetry reading you can disgrace only your-self, but being in a play has a military flavour; ie, once on stage you have to go through with it. Nor, if you go wrong, is there a fog of battle to hide

And what excuse can there be for head or heart failure when your part has as many advantages as Shakes-Player/Player King? Short, dramatically important, with a notable speech, its episode, like that of the Clown who smuggles the asp to Cleopatra (himself cousin germane to Dogberry) comes like a breath from another into the closed world of the Hamlets; its first is the only scene when, for a bear or two Hamlet recaptures his once near-perfect self; lastly, who plays it can go home at the interval.

Yet, when the moment of my first entry into our first preview arrived, my face had the pallor of a noctilucent toadstool. And when the performance was over Jonathan Pryce was heard to say (but gently, mark you):
"Here I am, faced with this man whom Polonius has just announced as one of the world's greatest actors, and I can barely hear his voice for the chattering of his knees." Luckily for me those joints were lagged by thick, woolly tights, so their judder could not be heard beyond row K of the stall.

Although death bad a hand in it, and with Forbes-Robertson and William Poel excepted, by 1914 Shaw's criticism and Granville-Barker's productions had trashed the 70-year-old tradition of Spectaculars, declamatory, Shakespearean-based.

Since that date, so my guess goes, there has been a continuous improvement in the acting and the production of Shakespeare's play until nowadays. as with Brook's A Midsummer Night's Dream, Derek Jarman's film of The Tempost, and the Richard Eyre/Jonathan Pryce Hamlet, we can perform them as well as, perhaps better than, they did at the Globe.

texts. From the cuts and the transposition of scenes he had made in the text we used (a collation of the play's second and third version) it was evident that Eyre intended to show Hamlet as one of a royal household isolated by self-absorption from the world beyond its court; whose authority stems from custom and wealth, as opposed to force and foresight; and whose indifference to affairs other than its own; fits it for nothing save to be pinched out by the first powerful comer.

In contradition to this public sloth, the court's private life was to be one of hopeless business; speculations, analyses, sendings forth, plans changed, plans abandoned, all of them originating in Hamler's deceptive acceptance of his usurpation; and the passions released in him thereafter.

The successful transmission of this idea: (or of any other idea concerning an ancestral work) depended on our Hamlet being made as fresh to the audience as if it had been written yesterday. The textual changes serving to clarify the narrative; the speed with which scene followed scene to provoke a feeling of suspense; the acters not to intone their lines, and give the impression that they know how to memorize and to deliver a celebrated text, rather than why the person they are playing thinks this rather than that, but to speak them with an air taken from daily life, the content of each sentence made plain, deriving from the matter in handno easy task when time has obscured many of Shakespeare's words: more difficult when the ear and not the eye must take them in; but possible (and an answer to Shaw's brilliant accusation that the Swan is more of a composer than a writer) if the difficulty is recognized, if the actors resist the temptation to coast on sonorous copy, if what is happening today, rather than a given style, be-comes the source of theatrical invention; and if, instead of presenting them as known, well-weighed, conventional fictions, each part is re-seen within the limits of Shakespeare's invention. but in the light of contemporary inteland probably unpaid.

Although he fails, Prince Hamlet keeps his natural virtues; his bravery, charm, his wit; the things that make us love him.

As Johnson wrote: 'When the success of Aeneas depended on the favour of the queen upon whose coasts he was driven, his celestial protectress though him not sufficiently secured against rejection by his pity or his bravery, but decorated him for the interview with preternatural beauty." So Shakespeare with Hamlet; though not with beauty, but with tragic grace.

My debt to Jonathan Pryce is considerable. The fear that possessed me during our first performance did not decline into a proper nervousness for eight weeks. It was only then I felt sufficiently at home on stage to spare a look at my fellow actors. Before that time I would get my lines running through my head on, as it were, an endless tape; start the machine some 30 minutes before my entry and, as I appeared, try to fast-wind that tape, prudish, a foul-mouthed, by-sexnauseated, hysterical bully, a murderer, by now quite mad, who, having passionate speech ", and then, fixing my eyes on his would never move them until the First Player's words had been replayed in their entirety through my mouth. Not that this poor substitute for concentration kept vagaries at bay. Describing (I hope with a kind of fervant accuracy) how Priam lost his head and Hecuba her all, thoughts such as "... have I left a cigarette burning upstairs ... I cannot stand that idiot Jiffy's verse ... at any moment now I shall forget..." would stream through my mind. Only Hamlet's powerful glance kept me

As he did during the production's last fortnight, it would have been a simple matter for Pryce to improve our joint scene by adding to it the kind of fresh detail with which he revitalized his part each evening. Seeing, I think, that the last variation would throw me, he would keep still, and I got through unscathed.

Was it not in his interest, too? Of course it was. And yet the prompt was in her corner; a yard behind me stood. Mr Keyin Quarmby who, as my understudy, knew my lines; and the audience are tolerant and often

Last week, I received a letter from a joiner, with whom I once worked, and who has been out of work for almost three years. He wanted to know, and rightly so, "What the hell is being done shout dealing with unemploy-ment?" He is a good craftsman, is not workshy, does not want to live on benefits and is bitter, very bitter. His only "sin" is that he comes from Merseyside, where unemploy-ment has been twice the national average for a very long

One of the worst features of the situation is that young peo-ple are facing a future without hope, and here may I add a personal note. Over the years. ecause of the casual nature of the building industry, Laptien experienced unemployment. It was always depressing to be out of work even if only for a few weeks, but because there was relatively full employ-ment, one knew that sooner or later another job would turn up. Herr Schmidt: a leader who shuns the limelight

Herr Schmidt, the Chancellor, flies to Moscow today on a mission which is the climax of one of the most demanding and problem ridden undertakings of his political life.

The six crisis months since the Afghanistan invasion have been aides agree, in many ways as difficult for Herr Schmidt as the Schlever kidnapping, when the lives of 87 hostages depended on him. Historians will probably re-

The Chancellor's desire for the European Community to act as a political force on the world called for cool, carefully thought-out crisis management. For his part, this consisted of attempting to preserve these sital elements of his policy in a balancing act requiring nerves of steel. It has not been easy. His position has been critizised and sometimes misunderstood abroad. Moreover, the subtle-ties of the situation fare hadly in the crude distortions of German and American election campaigns.

His delayed call for an Olympic boycott and reservations about economic senctions brought charges of diminished loyalty so the United States. The fact that West Germany is Usually self-controlled in public, the chancellor is known to let off steam in private; but recently arger spilled our into the open. In a surprising open letter, he attacked the Frankfurter Allgemeine newspaper which has consistently criticized his policies. And he reacted to leaks of President Corter's strongly worded letter of warning about Moscow with a newspaper interview in which he termed it astonishing.

Partly, his difficulties may stem from his own cool, reserved nature. Herr Schmidt is able to win visitors and audiences by force of his arguments; but unlike Herr Willy Brandt, his predecessor, he does not inspire enthusiasm for his cause.

He has, for instance, the full support of his party, despite reservations in some sections. But he appeals to their heads, not their hearts. He is res-pected, admired, trusted; but pected; admired, trusted; but one could not say he is loved. His handling of the situation has without doubt heightened his prestige. Herr Schmidt is now generally held to be the best chancellor West Germany has bad— though Opposition politicians still maintain that Konrad Adenager was greater. In fact, his qualities as a statesman have often made foreign observers wish Herr Schmidt would take on a greater role in world affairs, where strong and cool leader-ship is badly needed. More than one high-ranking visitor has asked him "Helmut, why don't you take the lead?" But Herr Schmidt shakes his man attempts to take a leading role in Europe, all the fears and resentments from the past will be reawakened. The result would be dispstrous, for him

Today the ordeal of what to take on a desert island or what to say on a literary brains trust is mitigated by the publication of a facsimile of Dr Johnson's Dictionary. It is not the carliest dictionary, or the biggest, or the best, or the most accurate. But as the perceptive chief editor of the Oxford English Dictionaries remarks in his pre-face, it is the only dictionary compiled by a writer of the first rank. If Dryden in the seventeenth century, Macaulay in the nineteenth, and T. S. diverted their own intolerable e with words to lexi-hy, their dictionaries have been as beguiling, and as influential.

It is a treasury of English literature, and an armoury of ideas, eccentricities, and jokes. Robert Browning is said by his hiographer to have qualified himself for the profession of literature "by reading and digesting the whole of Johnon's Dictionary". One could have cuessed it.

As a dictionary, of course, it is useless. Contemporary critics attacked it for being partisan and obscure: "But what most is his crowding his decisn last December to reject the dift budget sent to it by the Couril of Ministers was hailed by th Director of the European Movment, among others, as bioric 2. It looks rather less so ow. Six mouths after its gra rifiute the parliament has atthed a purely token amendmet to an almost identical draft buget, which will now go though without a further vote mess the Council, by rejecting th amendment, goes out of its w to prolong the quarrel. Candiose parallels with Hampin and the Stuarts have proved ctinctly far-fetched, unless we an imagine the Long Parliament anely dispersing after agreeing > vote ship money with a reducon of a halfpenny in the pound.

The parallel does not work ecause the European Parliament lacks the crucial power of purse which eventually assured the supremacy of the House of Commons in the British constitution. The provision of the Treaty requiring agreement between ir and the Council of Ministers on the Community budget may sound as if it gives it that power, but in fact does not. The resources of the Community are collected by the fiscal authorities of the memberstates, according to provisions which the parliament has no power to change. It is only on the spending of them that parliament and Council of Ministers have to

The other, perhaps more important, difference is that the Council itself is not a hereditary body claiming to rule by divine right, but an institution com--posed of members of governments which are themselves democratically elected and derive their authority from the very same citizens who elected the

The European Parliament's parliament. There cannot be much doubt about the result of any struggle for voters' loyalties between the parliament and the national governments. The Council of Ministers is very well aware of these points. and was therefore not intimi-dated by the parliament's challenge to its authority. They even became the victims of their own defiance, since the effect of their gesture has been to freebe Community expenditure at the 1979 level, and this has been reflected in reduced expenses and allowances for MEPs and their party groups. But the importance of this factor in their decision to cave in should not be exaggerated. Other, more important factors have been at work. Some MEPs have been subjected to the same pressure of farming opinion to which national governments are so sensitive. But most have been influenced above all by political realism, and have rightly been unwilling to take responsibility for prolonging the disruption of the Community as a whole.

To some extent the whole controversy has been overtaken by events. Hrs Thatcher soon put raid to any idea that this other "battle of the budget" might distract attention from her grande affairs. It has been the. other way about. The argument over Britain's contribution bethe level of farm prices for this year, so that eventually the two were settled in Brussels as a package deal. That in turn preempted the parliament's efforts to reduce spending on agriculture this year. Had it persisted in those efforts, the whole Brussels compromise might have come unstuck.

On the other hand, the way that the British problem has been solved his made it virtually certain that the whole structure of the budget and of the common agricult ral policy will be reexaminel during the next two years by the Council of Ministers, and no doubt by the heads of government as well. President Giscard d'Estaing has accepted this, and is trying to use it as an excuse to delay the entry of Spain and Portugal. Herr Schmidt as leader of the country which has now replaced Britain as the Community's biggest contributor, has served notice of his inteltion to insist on such a re-examination, which will in any case be recessitated, probably as early as next year, by the fact of Community expenditure under the present rules overtaking the level of esources vielded by the existing mechanisms. The solution which the Germans as well as the British will want, and which will probably be imposed by the very nature of the problem, will go in the direction that the parliament has indicated: less expenditure on agriculture.

a larger share for regional and social policies. The parliament need not be ashamedof having issued a clear call for such a reform, nor of having leen unable in the end to impose its (in any case largely symbolic amendments on a recalcitrate Council of Ministers. It is, after all, only a year old in its drectly elected form. A more interesting test of its authorit will be whether it succeeds in its eminently rational endeavoir to concentrate its activities in a single city—especially if, as convenience would dictate, it plumps for Brussels rather than strasbourg— for it will then have the formidable force of French nationalism pitted

AN UMBRELLA FOR BLACKS

Mr David Lane, the chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality, was reported to have called last week, when presenting the Commission's annual report, for a black civil rights organization in Britain similar to the movement in the United States. Whether be was wise to have put it precisely like that may be questioned. The new umbrella organization for the minority communities, whose creation was announced in London yesterday, seems to be very much what he was prescribing—though it de-nies that it is being set up in response to his initiative. Yet he must surely be embarrassed by some of its demands: He can hardly approve of a call to blacks and Asian- in this country not to cooperate with the police.

But this does not mean that there should be a hostile reception for the very idea of such an umbrella organization being formed. There has never yet been such a body in this country. The minority communities, and in-deed the different organizations within each community, have found it too difficult to cooperate. Perhaps they will still do so: ine will have to see the new jundy in operation for a little meile before assuming that it will sufficiently cohesive. But there can be no objection in principle to such an organization. It must be for the minority communities to decide whether they want a body to speak for them all; and if so, to set it up and to make it effective. This is not a task that the CRE can perform either directly or indirectly. The Commission has suffered quite a bit from the mistaken assumption that it ought to be the spokesman for the minorities in Britain. This has led to its being mistrusted by many whites because they think it is not sufficiently impartial, and by many blacks and Asians because they think it is not sufficiently on their side.

The CRE has been given two roles that cannot easily be combined: to encourage racial harmony by positive action and to be a law enforcement agency. But its task would be even more difficult if it were required also to be the voice of the non-whites. Nobody can act as judge and advocate at the same time, so this role would be incompatible with its function of law enforcement. Nor can official opinion determine who will represent the minority communities in this country. It may select members of minority communities to serve on official bodies—as it selects member—but that is quite another natter. The Government made rather a hash a couple of months ago of the way it handled the charges in the CRE's com-position But some of the criticism then was wide of the mark: it is the Government's job to appoint appropriate members to the Commission from all communities in this country, but not to find represnetatives from any

Just at the Government cannot make the CRE itself a representative body, so the CRE cannot create, and should not even seem to be sponsoring, such an organisation. Some of the same objections would apply. It is for the minorities to do that for themselves, as they now appear to be doing. If such a body is moderate and responsible in its opinions that will be much better for race elations in this country, and it is noteworthy that it was denied desterday that the new organisation stood for black power. Lut it is not a hopeful augury for the future that it should sart off by seeking to disrupt even further relations between the minority communities and the police. This is a particularly sensitive area for race relations where a constructive approach is essential.

avid Wood he politics

from rise In jobless the other week a former very

The other week a former very standy Minister, in an economically related part or northern England, celivered an impassioned old style stack on the high and rising level of unemployment and the sins of Conservative Government that bermitted it. The audience resonne, the politician privately said, appeared to a more than politic. smounted to no more than polite interest at best and borsdom with an old, old story at worst. No emo-tion showed, although presumably there sat in the hall men already unemployed and others whose jobs will be at risk in a deepening world trade recession.

The former Labour Minister could not understand it. Nor can I. Yohady moving steadily through the birthdays of his sixties will ever understand the change that has overtaken the politics of unemployment in the next few years at the ment in the past few years as the figures moved above the million and wow if forecasters are on the mark, threaten to go on to two

The explanation is simple. We are 1930s men. In January 1931, British unemployment figures passed two million and stayed there or above until world trade revived and rearmament took off. We saw the Jarrow marches. We saw the date queues, and passed the labour exchanges were hundreds of men gathered daily to form the human craphean. We knew (I hope my memory is trustable) that the mar-ried man got 17s a week, his wife hree shillings and each child one tilling and they were means tested before they qualified for the pirtance. Short of the 1939-45 war, chether you were in or out of work, : was the most deeply branding exerience of Dad's Army, irrespec-ive of your political party affilia-ion or of your economic theories the time. It continued to be that during is war itself and until Sir Harold

Wilson and Mr Callsphan in turn discovered between 1974-79 that a figure of one million or more unemployed had become both politically and socially tolerable even if not desirable. After all, Mr Heath and his Chancellor, now Lord Barber, both 1930s men, so late as 1972 had panicked at the thought of the dread million, and swung into a tight U-turn on their 1970 manifesto and its accompanying rhetoric. At that point Mrs Thatcher, although her rationale had yet to be fully worked out, began to show disenchantment with her Prime Minister. We know where that Ied—to 10 Downing

There is not space here to speculate about why the politics of unemployment have changed so very radically and quickly, except to suggest that all main parties have com-hined, by policies in office and by repetitive speeches, to educate the electorate into accepting that countering inflation is more urgent than creating work for the jobless. The pressure group of those in work is still much stronger than the pressure group of those out of work. What is worth registering is that the trade union, themselves have scarcely manned the barricades in the cause of men and women on the new human scrapheap, although in more generalized fashion they fight hard enough against closing un-economic plants and factories. It is also true that the trade unious, whose leaders harried Hugh Gaitskell for going above the sacred postwar figure of two per cent un-employed, can bear 1.5 million jobless men and women as blithely as the politicians and probably will not so much beyond reflex rhetoric when the figure climbs to two million. The danger of high unemployment today is not social, as at times it seemed in the 1930s. No doubt an increasing number of families feel the pinch, and there is risk that voungsters will leave school and college to find themselves unwanted, with the devil finding work for idle

But the real danger for Mrs Thatcher and the Conservatievs is electoral, at both by-elections and in 1983 or 1984 when the general election comes. It is growing fashionable for ministers in a desperate or defiant tone, to argue that the Conservative Party won over voters in May 1979, including a cop-siderable number of trade unionists. with warnings that the country must swallow a lot of bitter medicine before it could be restored to bouncing economic health. Suffer now, benefit later. Strength tomorrow through misery today.

Let us pray that the Cabinet do not enter their economic review this week decoving themselves with such clapurap. Voters swung behind Mrs Thatcher and her party because they believed, and were encouraged to believe, hat their life would be better. That their economic position would improve, that ability and hard work would earn its own reward, that the Welfare State would give way to the Opportunity State and also that owner occupiers would enjoy a lenient rate of interest. And that the ole of the State would not be to bushody everybody into submission but rather to create the conmission but rather to create the con-ditions is which everybody could fulfil theuselves. Nobody votes for misery, werry and uncertainty.

Saying hat, of course, I show myself a 1938s man, probably as wet as they come. I still see those awful dole queues of the 1930s, and remember interviewing the marchers as they made their way through Mrs. Thatcher home town towards Westminster. still see in imagination the roads hospitals and schools that could then have been built chean on the Kynesian and Llovd-Georgian principle instead of being built dear in the inflationary postwar vers. I itil remember Councillor Alfred Roberts, Mrs Thatcher's father and his manifestal colleges. father, and his municipal colleagues desperately trying to attract new iobs to Gantham, to keep the town from dying.

Of course, as 1930s men find hard to believe the economic factors have drastically changed. High unemployment can now run level-pegging with high rates of inflation, and Keynes is dead as the dodo. But if Mrs Thather wants a second term of office to complete her mission—as she rightly says she will need—then two million unemployed, high inflation, high interest rates, low investment, falling productivity, ricing backruptcies and the collapse of major judistries like steel, is now the way to ensure it. Nor, whatever ministers say, is that what the Conservative prospectus of 1979 offered.
So speak 1930s man, in or out of Cabinet. We are economically our of date, but they lest at scars who never felt a wound.

A permanent home for the Olympics

From Sir Ralph Kilner Brown and Mr Peter Curry QC

Sir, It would be improper and pre-sumptuous of us to make any comment upon the question of participation in the Moscow Olympics and we retrain from doing so. It is however urgently necessary in look beyond the battle of the boycott and to ensure that the future of the Olympic Games is properly safe guarded. We consider that we are better qualified than most to draw attention to this question in that in the days of our youth we were both participants in international achieparticipants in international active-tics and one of us was an active-politician before becoming a judge. Far-reaching decisions will have to be taken by the International Olympic Committee in the next few weeks. The basic renuscement is to put a stop to the nausearing nationalistic jemboree which the Olympic Games have become. It is said that some steps are already being taken such as the substitu-tion of a fracture in place of the winger's national arther. The reality important necessity in our view s to provide a permanent venue in One thing is crystal clear and that they have. Two, the President of the United States publicly welcomed and con-gratulated the American ice hockey players for bearing the Russians in the Winter Olympies. They were national heroes because mose games were held in the United States. Three, there is every probability that unless the games are held in a country not closely identified with the boycott there will be another the boycott there will be another counter beyont next time.

One thing is crystal clear and that is that the Americans have disqualified themselves as hosts for the 1984 Olympic Games. There are three reasons for this.

One, it was an American the late Avery Brundage as Passident of the International Olympic Committee for many years who should hear the major reasonability for allowing the Olympics to degenerate as they have.

The cost of a permanent venue although vart would be reduced if the scope of the games was drastically curtailed and it is alcost which could and should be shared by all the narricinating nations according to their resources. The facilities could be regularly and frequently used in the beyvent betteen Olympad in the beyvent betteen Olympad in the beyvent betteen Olympad. used in the by wars between Olympics such as for the European championships. Equally there is a case for making a permanent home case for making a permanent home in neutral Switzerland for the Winter Olympics. We would therefore call upon Lord Killanin and Sir Denis Follows to use their greet influence in the administrative hierarchy to seek to bring about mese desirable steps.

Controls on pornography From Dr L. H. Leigh

Sir. Some polemical attacks are brilliant caricatures, while others are merely caricatures. Ronald Butt's attack (June 26) upon the Williams Committee on obscenity The Committee's ventures into philosophy are demonstrably directed towards matters of substance. Their conclusions point to weak-nesses in extreme liberal arguments nesses in extreme noeral arguments against control; they are surely right to point out that J. S. Mills was concerned with the defence of ideas. From this flows their emphasis upon controlling pictorial representations, particularly in magazines, rather than upon books. In advocating control over the circumstances in which magazines are sold, the Committee had to, and did, take account of difficulties presently experienced in securing convictions. This is not entirely the fault of the courts. The House of Lords has moved on since Lord Denning spoke, and has affirmed that deprayed persons can be main-tained in their degravity by porno-eraphic matter, a view of causation ther is varually irrebutable by the defence, and would be so whatever sociological paraphernalia counsel chose to rely on. One result of accepting Williams would be to ensure that suburban newsagents would bave to be circumspect in what tiley displayed again a cause of concern to the police at present. Professor Court can, of course, take care of himself. What is clear is that the Committee sought to overcome problems of proving that a pornographic item causes wrong-ful conduct, or attitudes, or whet-ever, by basing its proposals on public nuisance for the most part, with restrictions on sale, etc. to young people. What practical alternative has Mr Butt to offer? Yours sincerely, L. H. LEIGH, London School of Economics and Political Science, Houghton Street, WC2.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Calculating a teacher's reward

Sir, With reference to the points made about pay-comperability your two correspondents (Mr. David Dawson of Snowmarket High School June 16, and Mrs M, Sankey, June 21), I would be the last to deny financial justice to the teaching profession of which I was long a member (and have a daughter who like Mrs Sankey's studied languages at Oxford—now an enthusias tic teacher). But, at the risk of seening paive and out-of-touch, I think both your correspondents leave out of consideration the Some people have en urge and of the people nave an arge, and gift for communicating to the young and participating in their lives. If they feel they can contribute in this field, it would be a bad day for the future of education in this country if better financial prospects else where diverted them from such a career. The other day we heard an opera singer mention on the radio that a singerhand often earned more than a singer. In many walks of life, it seems you must pay some penalty for the privilege of doing what you feel you can best do. As far as teaching is concerned, it acts as a healthy separator. Granted the question poses more of a problem to the numeracy expert I speak as a linguist. Yours faithfully.

From Dr D. J. Roaf Sir, Four distinguished educationalists suggest in a letter today (June ists suggest in a letter toomy April.

20) that the shortage of mathe matics and other specialist teachers. recruiting and training drive, be-cause the acceptance of the Cleggcommission's findings means a salary no longer seriously out of line with that which they could expect in other employment. The Clegg commission's award was based on starting salaries, but these have never been seriously out of line.

The Oxford University Appointments Committee staff tell me that a typical Oxford mathematician going auto teaching can expect to receive £6.000 to £7,000 (pre-Clegg) as head of department within six or seven years. But if he betame an accountant be would receive between £10,000 and £12,000 at the same age. Your business columns are same age. Your ousiness commins are full of the shortage of computer ex-pertise (often held by mathemati-cians). Pay and prospects in this field are far higher than in teaching.

The Clegg commission has been criticized for over-estimating the starting salaries for graduates outside teaching. It has certainly underestimated the career prospects for mathematicians outside teaching. Yours faithfully, D. J. ROAF. Exeter College. Oxford. June 20.

From Mr R. C. Smee Sir. Mrs Margaret Sankey's com-parison (June 21) of her daughter's salary of £3,276 a year earned as a shop assistant in London with what she would earn as a teacher is a As a good honours graduate, with five years of training she would receive a starting salary, including London weighting, of £5.454 pa.

While as a shop assistant Miss Sankey would not be likely to be on an incremental scale she would. as a teacher, receive automatic increments each year averaging £193.50 until she reached a maximum of £7,002 in London. However. it is extremely unlikely that she would reach the maximum of the lowest scale (scale 1) before receiving promotion to a higher scale. The salaries I have quoted include the full payment of the second half of the "Clegg award" in September, 1980, bur do not include the April 1 salary renegotiation. Yours faithfully,

R. C. SMEE, 12 Haviland Way. Cambridge. June 23.

From Mr D. B. Welbourn Sir. Schools will get enough good mathematics teachers, and the country enough good engineers, when England follows the example of all other European countries in insisting that no one may start on an undergraduate course at a university who has not passed mathematics as part of the school-leaving examination. The present situation whereby undergraduates can commence an arts course in this university without even having passed O level mathematics results in innumerate granates, the problem of whose employment is repeatedly discussed by the University's Ap-pointments Board. We need, Sir. the sort of educational flexibility offered by Germany, a country in which about 20 per cent of all engineering undergooduates have been at school through what in this country would be called the classical stream. Yours truly.

Arms for Afghanistan From Mr Nicolas Donnie

Sir. I had the dubious privilege to spend the last few mouths of 1979 with the guerrillas in Afghanistan and would like to correct a number simulation there.

The MI 24 armoured helicopter gunship is not the weapon most feared by the mujahidin, as your leader (June 19) would have us believe. It can only fire for on a flat trajectory, and its rockets and cannons are amour-piercing, possessing limited penetration against granite. To defeat the helicopter, one has simply to get into a cleft in the rocks or, failing that, hop from one side to the other of a large boulder, depending on the direction of attack. It is of course madvisable to run about in the open when these machines are flying.

To overcome this negligible threat, you suggest that we might supply the tribesmen with 12.5mm supply the tribesmen with 12-min machine-guns, so that they can perch on mountain-tops of their choice, and shoot down "helicopters swooping into valleys". One must agree that this can be done, but it is helish difficult and hardly a war-winning factor. The weapons that cause the most damage, and that cause the most damage, and casualties, in Afghanistan are heavy mortars, howitzers, fighter bombers and tanks. Against these, 12.5mm (or even 12.7mm), machineguns are a trifle inadequate.

Your correspondent, Arrigo Levi (also June 19) writes from Washing-

"unexpectedly turned into strength". One can only assume that he is referring to the score of squabbling exile Afghan political parties, whose adherents have corrupted many of the tribal leaders with their bribery, and have sold hundreds of camured weapons in the bazaars of the North West Frontier. Even worse, they have destroyed numerous military operations in Afghanistan by persuading the tribesmen to fight each other, instead of the enemy. (I write with some feeling on this lest activity, since I soent a singularly unpleasant night trapped between two rebel bands " who had decided to have a go at one another.) These divisions are not a strength, or even a weakness; they are an or even a weakness; they are an appalling disaster. Never have I seem so many guerrillas flee from a battlefield, nor met so many military leaders who were so reluctant to fight. What has served the Afghans till now is the ordinary people's dislike of communism and the savagery of the mountain telvain. That apart, they have nothing in their favour and even fewer prospects. Yours faithfully, NICK DOWNIE,

Concordes of the rails From Mr David St John Thomas

Sir, The moment has surely come when British Rail should be stopped spending more millions on the Advanced Passenger Train. Even when this was first mooted many years ago, it seemed an extra-vagence alongside the High Speed Train. There was, however, the argument that while the HST, based on conventional design, would always be limited to 125 mph, the APT (with its unique bogic design) would run at 150 mph. Now that it is reported that the top speed has been brought back to 125 mph, and that the benefit from any increase above this is "marginal", there can be little case for developing a second sophisticated fleet lacking in flexibility.

There is little doubt that if BR could wave a magic wand, the APT would disappear, and an electric version of the HST would start in service on the Euston-Glasgow route. But now we are going to be subjected to the usual arguments about the urgent necessity for a replacement for life-empired present equipment and how BR will lose business (and face?) if permission to build a substantial fleet of APT's is not forthcoming.

Two wrongs do not make a right. Whatever the short-term consequences, many people believe that the APT will give bad value for money, and that while there may have been a case for the development of one or two "Concordes of the rails", no way can they be justified as standard equipment. The cost of developing two ultrafast trains has, of course, been increased by the techning troubles experienced—surprise, surprise—by both, resulting is long delays and broken promises to customers. But once enough trains with extra cars are provided to prevent the severe overcrowding now occurring on both overcrowding now occurring on both the King's Cross-Edinburgh and Paddington-West of England rouses, the HST will have much in its favour, and this is the train on favour. and this is the train on which resources should be concentrated. That will mean urgently developing an electric power unit for electrified routes, while using the same standard passenger accommodation. Yours faithfully, DAVID ST JOHN THOMAS.

Somalia invasion threat From Mr Louis FitzGibbon

Sir, Your report (June 26) of increasing Ethiopian air attacks on Somali towns must renew speculation about a possible invasion of Somalia by combined Emissyian and Sometia by combined Ethiopian and Cuban troops. In a reply given on June 2 Lord Trefgarne said the Government was in consultation with the United States about supplying military aid to Sometia, and it would be interesting to know just how this consultation is going. Time is not on the aids of the Somalis who do not have enough heavy hardware to withstand a Soviet-directed attack—and one can imagine the plight of the 11 million refogees if caught in such a cross-

Thus it could be argued that military aid to Somelia would deter Colone! Mengistu from invading and, inderectly, benefit the refugees as well. Yours faithfully, LOUIS FITZGIBBON.

Spouses' property interests

From the Secretary of the Law Commission

Sir. In his letter published on June 24 Mr Derek Wheatley drew arrestion to some of the possible implica-rions of the recent decision of the House of Lords in Williams & Glyr's Bank Ltd v. Bolond and Others (Law Report June 20)

In the light of that decision In the light of that decision a purchaser or mortgages of registered land may be adversely affected by the rights of a member of the registered owner's family (or indeed of others) even though such rights had not been registered. The case thus once again raises the conflict however two interests—that of probetween two interests—that of pro-tecting family members against the consequences of unauthorised dealings with the family home, and that of simplifying and facilitating property transactions and thereby limiting the legal costs involved.

The Law Commission has in hand an examination of the law relating to registered land. However, the prenaration of our report (includingdraft legislation) has been hold un-rending the outcome of the appeal to the House of Lords in the Boland case, since it is clearly necessar-for the report to deal with the dificult social nuestion of how the halance between the two competing interests should be struck. We shall therefore now need to assess how great will be the additional burden of making the inquiries which the decision of the House of Lords stems to recessitate or whether the salution lies in passivers claims to solution lies in requiring claims to rights such as those in the Boland case to be motected on the register and we shall of course consider an" further views we receive on this important question.

Putting the point across From Mr R. R. Hopkins

Sir, As a retired company director of some indepth experience, I find your ORC Poll findings (June 23) highly significant—and therefore valuable.

It is too readily believed that the working population consists of (a) so-called realists who believe that struggent monetarism is unpleasant but necessary, and that the Government has a mandate for it, and (b) socially-oriented citizens who either ignore or refuse to accept the basic The Government's own statements almost monotonously include two fundamental viewpoints: (a) there is no other way, and (b) given co-operation all will come right in operation all will come right in the end.

The first is of course a gross overstatement—what is implied is that the Government currently favours no alternative. But the second is surprising in that efforts to secure cooperation are so hard to perceive. One is almost led to believe that the economic facts per se are expected to cap the argument. (This is historically very unlikely.) unlikely.)
The ORC findings indicate that whilst there is naturally division of political thinking, a delicate balance of a much more practical character exists as between ideas of motivation, life-style priorities, etc.

Your article concludes with some five elements to constitute a broad programme of stimulation and encouragement to the working community—with which I have no quartel. But first of all it is necessary to create a climate of readiness to listen and here, it seems to me, that the monetarist core of the administration just hasn't a clue. ration just nash a cine.

25 years ago From The Times of Thursday, June 30, 1955 Bombs in Cyprus

Affairs in Cyprus have been going from bad to worse and nour of the parties in the dispute can be proud of the way it has conducted itself. The leaders of the movement for enosis, union with Greece, should know that the shootings and bomb throwings are likely to silence many in London who have been pressing the Government to make some imaginative and conciliatory move. Even before enument to make some imaginative and conciliatory move. Even before the bombs were introvu the enosis leaders were putting themselves conside the range of argument by inesting on an immediate promise of a plebiscite instead of joining in working out a constitution that would bring them self-government and all that self-government must insisting on an immediate promise of a plebistic instead of joining in worlding out a constitution that would bring them self-government and all that self-government must carry with it. The Greek Government, on its side, is bedevilling matters by allowing inflammatory statements to be broadcast from Athens; the excuse that many of the statements are only routine press extracts or reports of speeches is humbug. And the British Government let many months pass and many opportunities slip while they were pretending that no problem existed . . somehow Cyprus has to be brought back into the main stream of colonial development by means of a new constitution that offers the prospect of advance in self government.

The Church of England is happy to remain part of an ernational church other parts of which have women priests. It could, therefore, have no objection to participation in a national church of which the same was true. A. convenant could have been drawn up on those lines, but was not. So now the whole process upon the ordination of Anglican women, with all that that implies. The Anglo Catholics will fight to the death against it, and any other view is sentimental. Unfortunately, sentimentality, has crept into the Churches Council on Covenanting's thinking.

The rate of bankruptcies has been increasing, the numbers in employment shrinking and many indicators in industry suggest that the situation is deteriorating rapidly.

Certainly exports have per-formed better than might have been expected so far this year. But some companies have been exporting on the thinnest of profit margins, or even at a loss, simply to try and hold on to markets in the hope that the situation improves.

Many companies view as matter of urgency the need for lower interest rates, which in all probability would also lead to a lower exchange rate for

Although the trend in money supply expansion has been in line with government aims in recent months, officials still do not feel confident about monetary trends.

Bank lending to the private sector varied enormously from month to month and figures published by the Bank of England show that sterling advances and acceptances to United Kingdom residents increased by £2,552m or 5.5 per cent between mid-February and mid-May. This was not greatly changed from the rate of increase in the previous quarter.

Probably more worrying at this stage is the 2.1 per cent rise in sterling M3 in May and, that company profits, excluding more particularly, the large North Sea oil profits and net turnround in public sector borrowing needs that lay behind it. BNOC favours stock to raise capital

By Nicholas Hirst
A comprehensive paper prepared by the board of the British National Oil Corporation (BNOC) has recommended the issuing of interest-bearing stock rather than equity as a way of injecting private capital into the state-owned group.

So far Mr David Howell, the Secretary of State for Energy, has been opposed to the limited choice of offering interest-bearing stock linked either to North Seans of the profile or production. profits or production.

He has believed that in order to give the British public a true stake in the North Sea operations of BNOC shares would have to be offered for sale. A final decision has not yet been taken.

The document is confidential, but is believed to recommend that the corporation should be kept as a single entity comprising both the oil trading and exploration and production interests.

A security—probably called a reserve interest stock—similar in concept though not identical to the oil production stock. offered by London & Scottish Marine Oil (Lasmo), should be offered to the public An ingenious solution has been found to avoid the raising of new debt in this way being added to public sector borrowMontagu, before his appointment had been advising the Government on various methods of injecting private capital into the corporation. As he was not a member of the board at the time the unanimous recommendation was made, he is not

Various options involving private capital in BNOC are considered by the Board's paper. It is against splitting the corporation in two leaving the trading arm, which through participation arrangements and royalty has rights to more than half the oil produced in the North Sea, in govern-ment hands, and selling off a majority shareholding in the exploration and production operations.

This method would reduce the public sector borrowing requirement in the year it was done possibly by £1,000m in money raised by the share sale, but it would deny the Government of anything except dividends in revenue to the exchequer in future years.

The board believes that the loss of state control of the offshore arm would be against the national interest. It would be complicated and difficult to bring about, taking many months of detailed negotiations to write new participation agreements with all other operators in the North Sea. BNOC would prefer that the trading and offshore interests should be sub-sidiaries of the same holding company even if it decided to sell off equity. Within the Government there have been fears of an adverse public reaction to selling off a majority stake in BNOC's offshore activities which are expected to bring in revenues of more than £1,000m in future years.

City analysts and Conservative theorists argue that the capital markets are sufficiently sensitive to pay for any shares offered, the amount reflecting the future revenue earning capacity of the oil to be

But some politicions believe that the offering of a majority stake would simply be seen as the selling off of the nation's birthright to a rich minority.

It has, therefore, long been thought that initially at least, less than a majority holding would be sold. The BNOC board is believed to have said that this confers few advatages to offering a 'reserve interest stock', but has many disadvantages.

If a minority holding is present in the offshore interests, BNOC would be forced always to act commercially. This could inhibit the Government from restricting output on BNOC's production in the fields in which it is operator, or in which it has an equity interest as a method of controlling depletion of North Sea reserves.

Steel plants cannot pay bill for electricity

Hambros 1980

Mr. Jocelyn Hambro, M.C., reports on the Hambro Group

Results Operating profits at £9,828,000 were 38% above last year. The second half of the year repeated and consolidated the strong performance of the first half reported at the interim stage.

There have been significant shifts in the sources of profits, banking profits improving, but those from other operations declining. Our share of Hambro Life Assurance and the profits of other associated companies have increased, but gains from investments were below last year's exceptional level.

Total dividends for the year of 16.5p per 25p share are 51% above last year. This increase is largely a catching-up after six years of dividend control. Dividends are covered 2.8 times by operating profits and 3.4 times by total profits.

Shareholders' funds in the consolidated balance sheet have increased to £82.9 million. There is an additional surplus of £65 million in the market value over the carrying value of the Group's investment in Hambro Life.

Operations The two principal contributors to the Group are the merchant banking operations of Hambros Bank and the unitlinked life assurance business of Hambro Life.

Short-term loan demand and volumes increased, but in sterling were constrained by the "corset." We have continued to keep our acceptance facilities mainly to their traditional role, financing the movement of goods and other self-liquidating business. Combined with high interest rates and strengthening sterling, this resulted in an end of year acceptances figure of £281 million, a little higher than last year.

Throughout the year, we were continuously a net provider of funds, both in sterling and foreign currency, to the inter-bank markets. Volatile exchange rates between all the major currencies produced high levels of activity in foreign exchange dealing.

We maintained a strong presence in Eurobond markets and also were active in the arrangement of private placement lendings and currency swaps.

The recovery in charter rates and values in most sectors of the shipping markets led to a significant increase in new business. In corporate finance, we were active in capital issues, mergers, underwriting, listings and financial advice.

Investment funds under our management exceed £1,500 million. In unit trusts the year reflected the adverse market conditions. Allied Hambro unit sales, however, were only a little below the previous year due, we believe, to a policy of selling through professional intermediaries and a consistently above average investment performance.

We acquired a 75% interest in Collett, Dickenson, Pearce, a leading advertising agency enjoying a very high reputation for the excellence and professionalism of its work, especially in the field of television advertising. Its progress has exceeded our hopes. .

Hambro Life reported another excellent year, maintaining its uninterrupted progression of new business expansion which, measured by initial commissions, was 32% above last year. Its profits and dividends increased by 51%.

Copies of the Annual Report can be obtained from The Secretary. Hambros Limited, 41 Bishopsgate, London EC2P 2AA.

Loss of 8,000 jobs causes serious concern in UK knitting industry

More than 3,000 jobs have been shed by Britain's knitting industries in the past 12 months. This represents about 7 per cent of the industry's total work force.

The rate of decline, which would have been significantly higher but for the govern-ment's decision to extend its temporary short time working scheme, is now causing serious concern among industry

Unemployment not 'inevtable' with anti-inflation policy

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Sir, In your leading article this morning (June 25) you say:
"It is essential that the Government should get across the message that these levels of unemployment are an essential consequence of the general anni-inflationary policy that has been adopted "(italics added). A insery reader would conclude from this that, in your view, heavy and lasting unemploy-ment is the inevitable price to be paid for getting rid of infla-

However, a careful gramma-tical scrutiny reveals that this is not what you said. The "essential consequence" is that of the "anti-inflationary policy that has been adopted and not a general attribute of anti-inflationary policies as such. It would not be difficult to sketch out alternative strategies which combined the aboli-tion of inflation with rising production and employment and one which did not entail as an essential precondition of its success, a substantial reduc-tion of real wages.

It is only because the Gov-It is only because me Gov-ermment is embarked on a policy of deliberately contract-ing production and employ-ment to whatever level is found necessary before trade unions are reduced to pulp that these consequences are "essential" and "inevitable".

Treatment of the 'Norwegian trough

Sir, Your correspondent Mr. Blake (May 22) is of course right, and Dr Frank Hansford-Miller (May 12 and June 16) is WYODE

In the first place, it is always open to countries to agree on a special regime for application as between themselves, provided they do not thereby trespass on the rights of other countries, and therefore, even if basic continental shelf law were as Dr Hansford-Miller described it, it was perfectly proper for Norway and the United Kingdom to diverge from this, inter se, by treat, if they wanted to.

But secondly, it has always been recognized that the case of the "Norwegian trough" (as it should be styled) probably falls within the category of special circumstances", to which the normal rules do not necessarily apply. In this connexion I think Dr Hansford-Miller might find it rewarding judgment of the International Court of Justice at the Hague in the North Sea Coatinental Shelf case (ICJ Reports 1969). were levied on current cost profits, objections would diminish. But then the openended liability of eventual capital repay-ment, which might have to be paid out at an awkward moment, would remain.

The Committee suggests various ways of coping with this: a sinking fund, a fiveyear period during which they could make the repayment, for example.

One suggestion is that if there were indexed gilts then companies could hedge their liabilities to some extent by buying matching gilts. The advantages of this system, that is if there is a more general reform of tax laws affecting not only profits but also capital gains, are obvious.

Borrowers would incur low initial costs and still retain the ability to hedge capital repayment against future inflation. Lenders, whether individuals or institutions, would get a real return on their loans.

But the whole idea needs further refin-Ing. It is by no means clear what sort of indexation one would use. As far as companies are concerned, the retail price index is a imperfect reflection of costs, Alternatives such as linking to borrowers profits or to the rise in the value of their assets would suit few lenders.

Then, of course, indexation can be based on the capital value of the loan only or linked as well to a variation in the rate of interest rates. The Wilson Committee has made a good start on the subject but further dehate is necessary.

Norcros

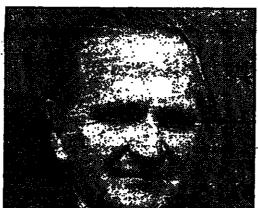

Current cost

Norcros, the industrial holding group is now in its 25th year as a public company. But it will probably be the last in which it is led by a pioneer of the industrial holding concept, Mr John Sheffield.

Investors once placed an extravagant faith in his ability to turn leaden acquisitions into golden earnings, but one snag in growing by acquisition (apart from the group's sheer size) is highlighted by the figures for the year to March 31. These go to shareholders along with the full accounts and a copy of a report to cmplovees.

In the first six months (to last September) the materials handling and light engineering divisions were hit by the engineering strike. Pre-tax profits were only stopped from being £1.5m adrift by the acquisition of Johnson-

Norcros is delighted with Johnson-Richards, and it is extremely profitable—under historic cost accounting. The trouble is that under current cost accounting ohnson-Richards becomes a burden, because its old plant, already written down to nothing, requires a realistic provision for replacement.

Ronald Kershaw

Foreign sales, however, are no indication of the numbers of machines that have been imported and the impression of most manufacturers and retailers is that there are warehouses throughout Britain bursting with foreign machines about to be released on to an unsuspecting British public. Both retailers and manufac-

Higher volume of trade

Lord Kenyon's Statement:

The Accounts for the year ended 29th March 1980 disclose a further substantial increase in the Company's turnover, but with gross earnings before tax only modestly changed at £1,018,000.

There has, however, been a reassuring real increase in the volume of trade, with the Film Factory achieving greater output for the third successive year, whilst sales of converted products, particularly converted polypropylene and laminates, recorded good growth.

Savage Cost Increases

For the current year, savage cost increases, particularly in energy - 55.5% is the latest uplift in the cost of natural gas, our principal source of energy for steam raising—and in labour, cause consequential increases in manufacturing costs which are too great to be passed on immediately to our United Kingdom customers, who are themselves experiencing a period of Intense competition.

At Bury, the new Research and Development building has been completed and equipped. The continuing emphasis on technical development which this facilitates, has been of considerable value in fostering growth of sales during the past year and will undoubtedly prove of increasing importance and assistance in the future.

Our Associated Company, Seaton Chemical Developments Ltd., together with last year's acquisition, Microfine Minerals and Chemicals Ltd., continues to prosper, and there is every indication that it will become an increasingly important contributor to Group profitability during the years ahead.

Principal Activities

The Company manufactures and converts transparent cellulese and plastic film. The products are used in particular as immediate wrappings by the confectionery, tobacco, biscuit, bakery and snack food trades, and for textiles and pharmaceuticals, together with many similar uses.

The fashing for investing in smaller companies is not new But it has intensified since the Wilson Committee started tak-ing evidence in 1977 and it is now focusing on the unquoted company.

Usually institutions investing in the hope of spectacular growth have preferred the smaller quoted companies. They are easier to research and easier to get out of than unquoted ones. But now the exhortations of the Wilson Committee, and to some extent fashion, have pushed the unquoted and the newly formed company into the limelight. Finding suitable small companies is time-consuming and has led to the emergence of several organizations to winkle out likely candidates for approval by the institutions. Apart from bank projects, there are now 13 British organizations, excluding the Industrial and Commercial Finance Corporation, ready to provide financial help for little companies from the coffers of the institutions. There are also two

Some institutions are now committing a small part of their funds to riskier, unquoted equity. As much as four years ago the National Coal Board pension fund decided to allocate 15 per cent of its cash flow to direct investment. It now has more than £30m of its £2,000m funds invested in smaller companies schemes and £70m in project finance".

The Pru has some £40m committed "in principle" to such investment—but only £5m to £6m has been invested so far. One of its ventures is the joint fund Moracrest in which the Pru, the British Gas pension fund and the Midland Bank have 2 one-third stake each. The bank finds the companies through local managers, and manages the fund centrally.

The Midland has a similar scheme, Meritor, with the Rolls-Royce pension trust. Other banks have vehicles for instirutional investment in smaller companies—but not necessarily in unquoted ones. The National Westminster, for example, has an authorized £1m fund for individuals to invest in small quoted companies. Its subsidiary. County Bank, has a similar 57m exempt fund invested in by 20 pension funds, including the NatWest's £2.5m fund.

Aside from the time it takes to find suitable small companies in which to invest, the searchers have run into one big snag-not all companies

Some issues suffer rather sharp drops

Bonds worked their way lower every day last week as the market finally gagged on an over-rich diet of new issues, writes AP Dow-Jones. Corporate issuers had been flooding the market for weeks, setting new volume peaks in their eagerness to take advantage of the plunge in rates from the highs of early spring.

spring. Some $6.2bn in new porate debt came to market in May, with June almost certain to exceed $7.5ss.

But there are limits. The market had its fill the same week with Chrysler Corpora-

New York, June 27.—The Dow Jones Industrial Average was down by 1.28 points to 882.16 at about 11 am today.

Declines outnumbered advances by 719 to 337 among the 1,510 issues crossing the tape.

First-bour "big board" volume Esmark, which rose by $5\frac{1}{2}$ in the previous two sessions, was the most active issue, down $1 to $48\frac{1}{2}$. It plans to sell its fresh meat division of Swift and Co. and its Vickers Energy unit.

On Thursday, the industrial average dropped 4.09 to $83.45. It had been up by $1 points an hour before the close. The composite index declined 0.26 to 66.45. Declines moved ahead of advances by 819 to 684 in the drop, while 380 issues held unchanged. The average price per share declined 14 cents. Volume again was heavy, totalling 45.110,000 shares compared with 46,500,000 Wednesday. There was nothing in the news to account for the drop. Republicans in the Senate proposed a 10 per cent tax cut for 1981 and Senate democrats directed the finance committee to report by September 3 on a tax cut for 1981 and Senate democrats directed the finance committee to report by September 3 on a tax cut for 1981. Active Esmark added 1\frac{1}{2}$ to $4\frac{1}{2}$ to $64$ fore both were halted. A published report said Fox wants to buy Chris-Craft's 20 per cent Fox stake for $45$ a share. It was rejected.
